The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

WOULD YOU? If I thought that a word of mine... Would you? ... Would you? ... Would you?

THE NAME OF THE MOMENT

Babies, one learns, are already being christened Marina, since Royal names have, as a rule, a following in less exalted circles.

FLOWER NECKLETS

The flower theme, so popular in fashionable dress circles in summer, has not been forgotten with the coming of autumn.

POPULARISING THE AUBERGINE

Practical gifts will have their place in the fascinating collection of presents for the new home of the Royal couple (observes the London Daily Telegraph).

A Morning Smile

ORDERS NO USE "Has your order been taken?" asked a waitress the would-be diner in a restaurant.

NO MORE TROUBLE

"Most interesting," said the sweet young thing to the motor-car salesman, "and now show me the heavy-duty tires."

THE COOK'S CORNER

CANNED PUMPKIN (EXCELLENT) Stew the pumpkin "dry," that is, reduce the pulp greatly.

How to Make a Hit With the Boys - Dorothy Dix Tells Girls What to Avoid

Act as if You Could Take 'Em or Leave 'Em, if You Want to be Popular With Men—There's Nothing a Man Craves so as the Peach for Which He Has to Climb, But He Won't Climb too High or too Far!

A young man of my acquaintance has compiled the following list of "Do's" for girls who desire to be popular with men. He says: Don't be too independent. The clinging vines always get their men because they make a man feel how big and strong and superior he is.

Don't be sentimental in public. Men have a sense of humor, even if girls haven't, and a man knows he never looks such a figure of fun as when he is spooning.

Don't hang on to a man's arm on the street and whenever you go out with him, as if you wanted to show the world that you had caught him and he belonged to you.

Don't be a gold-digger. Don't have more than one birthday a year. Don't hint for expensive presents at Christmas.

Don't talk too much, and don't talk about yourself, ever. Men have a horror of girls who babble on forever and ever like a brook, and not one man in a million is interested in what a girl really thinks.

Don't think that you can get by with just a pretty face. That's to the good, of course, but if a girl wants to make a hit with men she has to have a lot of parlor tricks besides.

Don't ever tell a man you love him. Keep him guessing. That keeps him interested, and by the time he has found out you are safely married.

Any girl, says the young man, who faithfully follows these rules can marry any man she chooses.

When Calvin received report of her hour with Eiman, he learned merely that Joan Daisy Royle had visited the lawyer; for the plain-clothes man, who watched her, had not ventured to follow into Eiman's office.

"The Royle girl," Calvin habitually said, when referring to her, utilizing the common phrase of the newspaper.

Calvin Clark brought himself to a realization of his occupation and reached for a book; but, although he forced himself to read, he failed utterly to banish the extraordinary mood which was come upon him.

He arose and walked about his room. "This is loneliness," he said to himself, with a puzzled surprise.

Calvin Clark was very used to being alone; in fact, he had lived all his life essentially alone, having been born the only child of his generation in the cool, severe, perfectly ordered old homestead beside the Merrimack.

His earliest memories were of himself, not lonely, but alone; his image of himself in childhood was of awakening, alone, in the large, cool, white room which was his and from the windows of which he could look out upon the tall elms and drooping willows an idyllic placid river.

He knew that there must have been a period when his mother or a maid had come to his room to bathe and dress him, but Calvin carried no recollection of the epoch.

Always, so far as he could remember, he had been self-dependent and had done for himself; always he had known that he must keep within him his passion to cry, to bristle with anger or bow in grief, to betray triumph or admit disappointment or to give way to feelings of affection.

Other boys might do all these things, as other mothers might cuff and scold, kiss and hug their boys alternately and irresponsibly. His mother, of course, never had slapped Calvin in all his life; and never

That Royle Girl

By Edwin Balmer

CHAPTER 34 LONELINESS

It was, in fact, the first time that Eiman had looked at her in connection with the idea which was now in his head. He voiced that idea no more definitely than by murmuring, with satisfaction, as he closed his eyes again, "Excellent. Excellent. I particularly will enjoy opposing Mr. Clarke in this case."

"How well do you like Assistant State's Attorney Calvin Clarke?" Eiman countered. "I hate him, hate him!" "Excellent!" approved Eiman, again. "Excellent!"

Then he sat up, opening his eyes, and returned practically to business. "It is clear to you, of course, that you are the vital witness, almost the sole witness for Kellar. Your bearing in public, your dress, your manner, your attitude toward your employer, your parents, your friends, particularly toward the prisoner in jail, must be governed at every moment out of regard for consistency of what you will say on the stand. I will tell you in a few days what that must be. For the present, you are doing very well; continue as you are. But if you encounter Assistant State's Attorney Clarke before I see you again, why—"

"Why what?" asked Joan Daisy, when Eiman dropped back in his chair again, with eyes closed. "By no means 'bride'—your instincts," said Eiman, smiling. "You have done very well in that quarter, too."

A few moments later, he dismissed her. When Calvin received report of her hour with Eiman, he learned merely that Joan Daisy Royle had visited the lawyer; for the plain-clothes man, who watched her, had not ventured to follow into Eiman's office.

once, lips on his, had she kissed him. Her kiss was a touch of her lips on his forehead, usually, or sometimes upon his cheek; and when he kissed her, always her cheek was offered. He could not remember that ever he had kissed his father or his father-in-law; and he could not imagine his father striking him for any reason whatsoever. (To Be Continued.)

READ YOUR HEALTH IN THE PALM OF YOUR HAND

Stretch the hand out flat and look at the coloring which lies just beneath the outer skin. If you are in good health the flesh probably is that rosy pink.

The blood carries life force and nutriment to every part of the body. If the blood is low in haemoglobin and red corpuscles, the person is more or less anemic or "run-down" ... easily tired ... lacking in vitality ... perhaps close to serious sickness.

Fortunately the vitality of the blood can be increased in the majority of cases, as was proved in a special clinic of 40 persons whose haemoglobin and red corpuscles were low. Under constant direction these patients took a 30-day treatment of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Blood tests taken before and after treatment demonstrated conclusively in the microscope how this excellent remedy had built up the vitality of the blood and restored health and vigor.

If your palm or your feelings tell you your blood is not up to normal, try a 30-day treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You, too, will probably experience the same pick-up in general health and the same gain in strength and vitality as were observed in the persons forming the clinic. Health is precious. Let Dr. Williams' Pink Pills help you keep it. This tested remedy has amply proved its restorative qualities. Full size box for 50c.
