Rotarians Discuss Rev. Taylor's Remarks

Mr. Taylor's remarks were referred to the criticisms made upon the alleged lax enforcement of the prohibition law by Rev. Mr. Taylor, and said they were accustomed from time to time to submissions of the kind to spasmodic outbursts, which might be actuated by the best intentions, but were likely to do more harm than good when published abroad.

Mr. Taylor said he was very pleased to hear what Mr. Inman said, as he agreed with his remarks. He called upon Mr. J.A.S. Bayor for remarks.

Mr. Bayor said he had been reading in the Examiner's column "Forty Years Ago" about the introduction of the Scott Act and he thought they would all agree they had gone a long road towards the betterment of conditions since then. Indeed conditions were very much better than they were twenty years ago, when he first came to Charlottetown. In those days it was hardly safe to pass after dark of which he now lived. He thought everyone would admit there was an improvement in the morals and manners of the city and would agree it was a better place in which to bring up a family even than it was twenty years ago. He would suggest that, from an artistic point of view, there might be an improvement by pulling down some unsightly fences and old insanitary dwellings.

Mr. H. V. Buntain was next called upon by the Chairman. He said he had not given the matter a thought till Dr. Johnston rang him up that afternoon and asked him to say something about Rev. Mr. Taylor's speech in that morning's Guardian. He contended that the moral standard was higher now than ever before. We had the best temperance law that ever was put on the statute books and a only required the people to get behind it and to see that it was enforced. He added later than his firm employed many men, and he could say last year they never had a man sacking employment under the influence of drink, nor had any of those they employed been under the influence of drink, while on duty or off duty, because of it.

Mr. G. F. Hutchison, one of the new prohibition commissioners, said the question raised by Mr. Inman was whether education or legislation was the better method of dealing with this important question. He thought education should come first, followed by legislation. He happened to hear the address of Mr. Taylor and while it might appear a little extreme in parts, on the whole it had his approval. He was afraid he could not agree with the moral standard which was laid down in the Prohibition Act. He had heard the moral standard which was laid down in the Prohibition Act. He had heard the moral standard which was laid down in the Prohibition Act.

Mr. Percy Turner, who was next called upon, said that Mr. Inman seemed to raise the question of moral suasion versus law, and he reminded Rotarians that as a parental authority, without the backing of corporal punishment, where necessary, was not much use, so moral suasion without the backing of legislation, effectively enforced, would go far to do what he believed we needed law to enforce and guide, still he considered that moral suasion properly applied, had the better effect. He thought that Rev. Mr. Taylor had a whole lot of things to say in what he said. While conditions might not be so bad as they were fifteen or twenty years ago, yet they were not so good as they should be, if the Prohibition law were properly enforced. His business was on a side street and there he saw a good deal more of the effects of intemperance than those who lived on, and frequented, only the main thoroughfares. Just that day he had taken a man he found lying paralysed on the street into his premises until he could recover. Day after day he saw men the worse of drink on the same street, and if any Rotarian doubted his statement he invited them to come to his office and see for themselves. Was that an ideal condition for any city let alone a prohibition city? He did not agree with those who said all the fault lay with administration of the law. He was afraid that many people considered the Prohibition law was intended to prevent the other fellow getting drunk. They did not get behind the Prohibition law and support it by example as well as precept. No prohibition law was worth the paper it was written on, unless those who had the best interests of the community at heart got behind it and gave it their support.

The Chairman next called on Mr. James T. McKee, who agreed with Mr. Turner that the moral law was higher than ordinary legislation, but felt legislation sometimes went about of the moral standard of the people.

Dr. A. B. Reid said conditions were very much better today than before the enactment of the Prohibition law.

Mr. J. A. Clark, President of the Club, was the last called upon by the Chairman. He agreed that if we had sufficient education and that put into practise we would not require legislation. He heard Mr. Taylor's address and felt that it was a little extreme. He could endorse what Mr. Buntain said about employees. Last year he had not to dismiss any man for being under the influence of drink, and had to suspend only two, whose absence, inquiries indicated, was due to the effect of drink, and the suspensions had had a most beneficial effect. The Chairman then called upon any others to express their views, and Mr. Inman proposed that Mr. Deuch and Mr. J. A. S. Bayor be invited to give a "Wheezy O'U", to which invitation Mr. McKee kindly responded.

IN MEMORIAM

JAMES WENDELL FRASER

There died on Monday, December 26th, at St. Martha's Hospital, Antigonish, Wendell Fraser, in his 21st year, after a very short illness.

Having completed his course at the University of St. Francis Xavier, where he attended the engineering classes for three months. In community at St. Francis Xavier, he was a clever and industrious pupil.

He was a young man of exemplary character, of quiet and unassuming disposition, rather reserved at making friends, but once a friend he remained so till the end. Although known intimately by only a very few he was loved and admired by all, in fact, to see him was to admire him.

His remains were removed from Antigonish on Tuesday, December 27th. A large number of his friends accompanied the remains to the home of his parents. On Wednesday morning at 9.30 a. m. there was a requiem mass at St. Peter's Church, Rev. Fr. MacPherson, rector of the University of St. Francis Xavier, officiated, assisted by Rev. Dr. C. Connelly, also of the College, as deacon and Rev. Father Placido, a visiting Capuchin missionary, as sub-deacon. Absolution at the grave was performed by the pastor, Rev. J. A. DeCoste, assisted by the priests aforementioned.

The simplicity of the public goes to the stricken family who, however, are perfectly resigned by the comforting and unshaken truth that the promising life blighted in his dawn is exchanged for a better one. Besides his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Fraser, he leaves three young brothers, William, Selwyn and Henry, also one sister, Helen. Mr. and Mrs. James Fraser formerly resided in this city, he being employed with the Light and Power Company. Mrs. Fraser is a niece of D.D. Ryan Purser on the Car Ferry.
