The eighth annual meeting of the shareholders of The Brown Holder Biscuits Ltd. was held in the company's offices last Tuesday afternoon, when reports were presented by the President, Mr. Ambrose Wheeler, and the General Manager, Mr. Fred M. Brown. There was a feeling of satisfaction that the company had weathered the industrial storms and was now on the high road to notable success. The announcement that the directors had declared a small dividend on the common stock of the company was received with applause by the shareholders present. Eighty-five per cent of the stock of the company was represented at the meeting in person and by proxy.

In view of war conditions and the foothold at the company has been able to establish from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the year 1940 is expected to be the best in the history of the company.

The following directors were elected for the ensuing year:—

Ambrose Wheeler, Thomas Nowlan, F. M. Brown, S. L. Holder, J. H. Farwell, R. A. Prechet, F. J. Sumner, and B. W. Lockhart.

Monitors: F. G. Poole, Saint John, and C. C. Avar, Sackville.

At the close of the meeting of the shareholders a meeting of the directors was held, when the following officers were selected:—

Ambrose Wheeler, President; F. G. Poole, Vice-President; F. M. Brown, General Manager; S. L. Holder, Secretary-Treasurer.

Tire Inventor's Centenary this Month

MAN WHO REVOLUTIONIZED TRANSPORT BORN IN AYLESBIRE, 100 YEARS AGO.

Because an obscure veterinary surgeon rebelled against the jolts and bumps he encountered during his dog-cart travels about his practice, an invention was born that has since put the world on wheels.

The centenary of John Boyd Dunlop is observed throughout the world on February 5th, 1940. He was born in Dregthorn, Ayrshire, 100 years ago, and emigrated to Belfast, Ireland, in his early twenties. Success, at the age of 22, brought him the cushioning of vehicles from road shocks crystallized in the idea of enclosing air under pressure in a rubber and canvas tube placed between the road and the rim of the wheel.

Fired by the idea, he constructed a pair of tires on rims and fastened them to the two driving wheels of a carriage. Then, in the bright moonlight of February 28th, 1888, Johnny Dunlop went on a test run, little realizing he was participating in an invention that was to revolutionize transportation throughout the world and lead to the tremendous expansion of travel.

Canada Points Way For India Jurist Thinks

DELHI, Feb. 12.—(CP)—The example of the successful constituent assemblies of Canada and other dominions in finding a common ground of agreement for both majority and minority was taken by Sir Maurice Gyver, Chief Justice of India, urging a new approach to the solution of the Indian problem.

He said the processes of constitution-making in France, Germany and Russia with those adopted in Canada, Australia and South Africa. He found the older countries had failed.

Speaking of the three dominions he said: "Here then are three constitutions which became law and are still in successful operation. They have been amended since they were made, but in no fundamental respect, and they continue to give generally the confidence of the peoples for whom they were designed."

"The important thing to observe is that in each of the three cases the body which hammered out the scheme consisted of a very small number of delegates and that though no doubt, there were difficulties to be overcome there was no organized volume of opinion which either refused to cooperate or which recorded its dissent from the scheme ultimately adopted."

"In a body of delegates such as I have described, men come to know each other better, to appreciate the strong points of another's case, and to realize the weaker points of their own. The impact of mind upon mind has its effect, and after some time such is the experience of those who

Laborious Affair

Lessons to be learned from previous constitution-making were: "One is surely this, that it is not the making of the constitution itself which necessarily produces agreement; a second, that no agreement of any kind is possible without personal contacts and certainly is not to be achieved by a long-range artillery duel; a third, that constitution making is a laborious affair, which requires infinite pains and patience if lasting results are to be achieved."

One prominent newspaper, commenting on Sir Maurice's findings, applied them to Europe after the war. The paper agreed on the success of the Dominions' constitutions and added: "It is certain that some international system for the prevention of future wars will have to be reconstructed or created. Whether it takes the form of an association of sovereign states such as the present League of Nations, or of a federation to which some part of their sovereignty is surrendered by its members it will require a constitution; and its success or failure will depend upon a proper appreciation of the lessons of history."

Roosevelt Keeps States Guessing Over Third Term

NEW YORK, Feb. 11 — (CP) — President Roosevelt's plans were the big enigma as the United States entered its presidential election year in which the economic and social reform known as the Roosevelt New Deal is at stake. Election Day is Nov. 5.

Naturally the president has been in no hurry to announce whether or not he intends to be a candidate for his son's triennial. Then in the far in advance that he is not a candidate would automatically cost him much of his influence in a campaign which would plunge right into the task of finding his successor.

For Mr. Roosevelt to state a long way ahead that he is a candidate would make him a target long before it was necessary, of all those who oppose his candidacy. It would start months of angry debate on the "third term precedent" which kept other distinguished Americans from seeking to serve more than eight years in the White House.

Official Washington and an alert press corps cannot make up their minds on what Mr. Roosevelt intends and the baiting way in which he throws out half-hints has offered no real value.

Why And Why Not

Those who believe he will run argue along this line: There is admittedly nobody in sight of Mr. Roosevelt's stature; his knowledge and experience of foreign relations are vast; and he is known to hope that he may go down in history as the man who brought peace into a warring world.

But there is the other side: Mr. Roosevelt is a great student of American history. He and his advisers know just how deep the feeling against a third term really is—and how far such a feeling could be stirred up against him in a blast of publicity—and he may feel that if he can have a voice in choosing his successor as Democratic candidate he will have achieved the perpetuation of his dream of improving the lot of the "forgotten man."

In a word, he may come out with a declaration that at no time did he intend to break with the third-term precedent. Or he may believe that the war demands his candidacy. In the latter event his acquiescence in a party draft movement would probably be the procedure.

Roosevelt is too clever a campaigner to stand for office unless he is absolutely sure in his own mind that he will be re-elected. The place of the defeated candidate is not the niche he plans for himself.

Most observers agree that he can have the nomination on a runaway, despite the fact there are many aspirants for it. But in considering whether or not the president can be re-elected, attention is usually called to the groups who have broken away from him.

In the election of 1936, the president defeated Alf Landon, Republican, by more than 10,000,000 votes. But the election of 1938, when the presidency was not involved, saw several key states swing into the Republican column.

That swing was attributed partly to the fact that many of the so-called Conservative wing of the Democratic Party came out against the administration because of the Supreme Court reorganization battle of the previous year, the "purge" and other causes.

How far such a swing has gone, and whether the Democratic Party has permanently lost such voters, remains to be seen.

HALIFAX, Feb. 12.—(CP)—Bakers shipped up the price of bread in Halifax today 8 1-2 cents wholesale for a 1-2 pound loaf and 10 retail, increases of 1 1-2 cents and two cents, respectively.

Bakers said the raise in price was necessary "in view of the increased cost of flour and other products and equipment used in the business."
