THEY crackle IN CREAM

THERE'S no other cereal like Kellogg's Rice Krispies. Bubbles of rice so crisp they crackle and pop in milk or cream.

Children, especially, like this fascinating cereal. Wholesome, too—let them eat all they want. Fine for breakfast, lunch, or the kiddies' supper. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

THINK IT OVER

$20.00 per month rent amounts to $2400.00 in ten years and $50.00 amounts to $6,000.00 in the same time, not including interest. Why not stop this waste of money and make a start for a home of your own, and then you can snap your fingers at your landlord.

The first step to take is to secure a building lot, and the legal owner of this has made one of the most important moves towards a home.

At the head of School Street a number of very desirable building lots are offered for sale, and anyone interested in a home of their own should take a run up and see the owner.

All buildings erected on those lots must be up to a standard agreed upon.

A Morning Smile

Mike O'Shaw obtained a position at an observatory and spent most of his time watching the professors at the telescopes.

One day a professor walked in, went to a telescope, and began to make observations. Just then a star fell.

Mike gasped. "Begorra, that was a fine shot, sir," he said, with great admiration. "Why, ye hardly had time to take aim at it."

ALL ABOARD!

At Waterloo Station an American, arriving by the boat train, engaged a taxi to drive him to his hotel.

Steamer trunks, hat boxes, overcoats and umbrellas were piled on the taxi. The driver peered out through a crack in the mountain.

"Is that all?" he asked. "Yes," said the American, "that's the lot."

"Well, well," replied the driver, as he let in the clutch, "I suppose they wouldn't let you bring the Statue of Liberty?"

MIND READING

Ask a friend to open a book at random and select a word within the first 10 lines and within the 10th word from the end of the line. Now ask him to double the number of the page and multiply the result by five. To this he is to add 25 and the number of the line he selected. Then he multiplies the result by 10, and adds the number of the word in the line. You ask him to tell you the final result, close the book and hand it to you. You promptly open it again, and point out the word he had in mind. To do this, simply subtract 250 from the result he gives you. The number in the unit column will indicate the number in the line, that in the tens column the number of the line, and the remainder figures the number of the page.

Ten Rules for Husbands Who Want to Make Their Wives Happy—Philanderers, Break Hearts if You Must, But Don't Ruin a Woman's Life by Marrying Her!

Dear Miss Dix—I am planning on being married soon and it is my ambition to make my fiancée the happiest wife in the world. Can you suggest the ten best rules to follow in order that I may do so? BILL.

Answer: Well, Bill, any man can make his wife happy if he wants to and if he deliberately sets out to do so. The trouble with most men is that they think that just being married to them is all that any woman could possibly desire in the world and that when they have done all that a girl's finger they have done all that any wife can sit up and get all the kick out of life she wants by just gazing on her marriage certificate.

Which isn't the case, of course. Marriage can get mighty dull and monotonous in the course of twenty-five or thirty years if the husband doesn't do anything to pep it up for his wife. And so if a husband wants to keep his wife thinking herself the luckiest ten rules that he should do something about it. And here are the ten rules that I should suggest for him to follow:

First. Keep up the courtship after the wedding. Don't drop all her how beautiful and wonderful she was. After marriage she has only one, so it is up to him to keep busy handing her out the sweet talk.

Second. Make it part of your daily doing to pay your wife a compliment. That keeps up her morale. A wife's public is her husband and if he never gives her the glad-hand she is apt to slump. She thinks, what's the use in doing myself for a man who never notices what I have on, or wearing myself out cooking a good dinner for a husband who gobbles it down without apparently knowing the difference between hash and a ragout?

If you want your wife to keep up her looks and to be a crackerjack housekeeper, keep her on her toes by being unstinted in your praise. Flattery is good for courtship. In marriage it is a necessity.

Third. Don't treat your wife as a servant. Women care even more for appearances than men do and no wife on his face without wondering why she should be so.

Fourth. Be as entertaining at home as you are abroad. Don't be No. 1 in the world of a happy evening is spending it with a man who only grunts when she is spoken to and never makes a voluntary remark, except panishment. See that your wife gets some.

Fifth. Be a little ray of sunshine. No woman can make a happy home by herself. That is a two-handed job that takes both a husband and wife working together to pull off. Don't save all the temper and suspicion to when you are together. Make yourself as agreeable to your wife as you would to a stranger.

Sixth. Deal generously with your wife about money. Give her not only a housekeeping allowance but an allowance for herself. No woman can run a house economically if she does not know how much she has to spend. And no woman ever forgives a man who makes her come to him as a beggar for every cent. Giving a wife an allowance saves 365 heart-aching spats a year. It preserves a wife's self-respect and makes her a partner instead of a tightwad.

Seventh. Don't treat your wife's family as if they were poison and act as if you were being martyred every time they come on a visit. You ally to the mother who bore her and the father who tolled to support her and the brothers and sisters she grew up with, she would lack the very qualities that make her desirable as a wife.

Eighth. Make little treats for your wife. Give her surprises. Take her to the movies. Remember anniversaries. Do something to keep her convenience. Spending a little money on giving a wife a good time is the best investment any man ever makes.

Ninth. Chum with your wife. Talk to her about the things that she is interested in. Tell her of your hopes and plans. It is the easiest thing in the world for a man to get so absorbed in his business and for each other and not to be so obsessed with the children that they lose touch with each other and don't care apart, and come to be such strangers that they cannot even carry on a conversation together, because neither knows anything of the other's inner life. Watch out for this will happen to you.

Tenth. Don't take your wife for granted. She isn't a mind-reader and doesn't know what you love her and appreciate her and think she is the greatest woman in the world. Never cease telling her how marvellous you think she is, and if you will do that she will be the happiest first taste. "The nicest place in New York" owed some of its niceness to ingenuity in circumventing prohibition rules. Yes—sweet champagne, he well loved. He could see her sipping it . . .

They arrived at their destination. The chauffeur, long ago warned through the speaking tube turned into a quiet street, and drew up in front of a door with a clipped, dwarf box trees for sentinels. "There was an instant when Nazlo watched the girl alertly, lest she looked to give him the slip; but he knew her arm with a show of firmness, and she walked demurely into the entrance hall."

"Is there a room where I could wash my face, and make my hair tidy?" she asked. Her eyes were wide and innocent. She flushed delicately at Nazlo tried to read her had recovered from the "flutters" and had settled down in a tractable mood.

While she was shown up a short staircase to the ladies' cloak room, Nazlo occupied himself in engaging a butler to bring a room for two, and ordering a dinner as he thought would delight a conventional, new to New York.

Fortunately, at that season of the year, the popular restaurant was not crowded. There were several rooms to choose from, and Nazlo selected one with decorations to suit Terry Desmond's coloring. It was all white and gold, with a few purple cushions.

The Greek thought that the girl with the red hair and the simple black dress would be a dazzling beauty in that setting. When he had asked for yellow roses to be placed on the small round table, Nazlo went to intercept Terry as she came downstairs.

He had been so anxious to finish in time to meet her, that hardly ten minutes had passed; and he waited patiently for eight or ten more. But surely a girl like Teresa Desmond, innocent of paint and powder, wouldn't need half an hour to banish the little dust picked up in a limousine!

Five minutes more he grudgingly gave. Then he sent a message to the cloak room. A young lady with red hair and dark eyes, dressed in mourning, was to be reminded that Mr. Nazlo was waiting and hoped she was all right.

The boy who ran up to tell the cloak room attendant returned almost at once. The young woman said that the cloak room that evening; and there wasn't anyone there now.

woman in the world and the most envied. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—About six years ago my sister brought a young married woman home with her for a visit. We became attracted to each other and I finally obtained a divorce from my wife and she later obtained a divorce from her husband and we plan to be married. But lately I have been thrown in contact in a business way with a young woman very much in love with each other. I have tried to give her up and stay away from her, but I can't do it. She is different from any girl I have ever known and I know we could be very happy together. However, as I feel partly responsible for my fiancée's divorce I feel in honor bound to marry her. Please advise me what to do. PUZZLED MAN.

Don't marry No. 2. Don't marry No. 3. Don't marry any woman whatever, no matter how much you may think you are in love with her at the time. For you are one of the unstable men who are only capable of a passing fancy and you have no right to mess up women's lives by marrying them.

There are plenty of men like you who should kiss and ride away, always in the opposite direction from the altar. They should never marry. They may leave behind them a few weeping damsels, but they will not of their homes, with little half-orphaned children clinging to their skirts that they have to go out into the world to support because their father is paying alimony to two or three divorced wives.

A man who is lured by every pretty face and to whom every fluttering skirt is a challenge to get up and follow should recognize his own weakness and have enough humanity about him not to make innocent women the victims of his constitutional lack of emotional stability. Such a man could not be loyal and faithful if he tried. And he never tries. He has always a roving foot and a wandering eye and there will always be some woman who will have an allure that his wife doesn't possess.

So have a heart and don't marry. You tired of your wife. You are tired of this new girl who is "different" for she wouldn't be different if you were off. You would weary of any woman as soon as the charm of her novelty wore off.

You may hurt their vanity a little in forsaking them before marriage, but you won't give them the mortal wound that you will deal them in forcing them to divorce you if they marry you. No woman can have a greater grief than being a philanderer's wife.

CHAPTER 13

THE BIRD HAS FLOWN!

Terry wriggled herself free in an instant, sprang up, and was thrown onto the seat again by the motion of the car. She fell against Nazlo's shoulder and he steadied her, but did not attempt to repeat his experiment.

"Don't look so cross, little girl," he said. "I didn't mean any harm. You're only a child. You shouldn't have such a pretty back of a neck, if you don't want it kissed!" and he laughed pleasantly.

"Please take me home," Terry whispered. "I don't want to go anywhere to dinner."

"Now—now, we mustn't be silly!" the Shoe King gently scolded. "I've said I was sorry. Isn't that enough? I tell you I'm on the square. If your father didn't know that, he wouldn't let me take you out."

"These days girls don't mind a kiss or two, I swear they don't. You've been brought up in an old-fashioned way. But now I understand you better, it'll be all right—you'll see."

"I'm going to show you the nicest place in New York to dine. We'll have a beautiful little room all for ourselves, and you shall choose just what you want to eat. Say you forgive me!"

He took her hand, but, notwithstanding her father's advice, Terry snatched it away from him. "I hate being touched!" she said.

Her heart was pounding, her ears humming. She feared the man. Precisely what he could do to hurt her she did not know, but the sight of him so near made her sick.

"How angry Mother would be! Tears stung the girl's eyelids, but she would not let them fall. What ought she to do?"

It was clear that Nazlo would not take her home. She could not make him. If she leaned out of the window and called the chauffeur, he'd obey Nazlo, not her. If she tried to spring out of the car, she would fall, and perhaps be killed.

Yet she must make up her mind to some plan. There was just one thing certain: she would not dine with this man in the "beautiful little room all to themselves" which he described.

Suddenly an inspiration came. The girl almost laughed with the relief and excitement of it. "Well, do you forgive me?" Nazlo repeated.

"If you'll let me alone," Terry said.

"The Greek had been disconcerted for a moment. He had thought that the silly little chicken meant to make a scene, so now he accepted her concession thankfully.

Anxious to win her back again, he began to talk of impersonal things: must go to some night in future. And as he spoke, Nazlo mentally set the stage for the next act.

He'd give the child sweet champagne; she wouldn't like it dry, at
