DOCTOR SAYS NOISE CAN INJURE BRAIN

CHICAGO, July 13—(CP)—Continued loud noise can hurt your brain and your nerves as well as your ears, a Milwaukee doctor says. Dr. W. E. Grove declares the results of long-continued clamor are "not incomparable to battle fatigue." Writing in the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. Grove says: "The nervous system is not constituted to take this sort of battering. One becomes jittery, jittery and irritable under the impact of continuous noise. 'Exposure to extremely loud sounds over a long period results in impaired hearing. The louder the sound, the greater the impairment over a similar period.' He says the danger point to health lies somewhere between 70 and 100 decibels. A decibel is a unit for measuring the loudness of sounds. Ordinary office noise rates about 40 decibels, a busy street about 65 decibels, and heavy traffic about 80 decibels.
