THE "CABLE PARADE"

CANADIAN NATIONAL Telegraphs men and women call it the "cable parade," because it develops each time general leave is granted to airmen receiving instruction at one of the larger training centres in Canada.

Young men from many parts of the Empire are trained here under the Commonwealth plan. On arriving at their depot or on the eve of furlough they storm the nearest telegraph and cable offices to send messages to the folks at home.

The upper photograph shows the staff doing capacity business at one of the 1,000 Canadian National Telegraph offices while (below) other airmen await their turn to file messages.
