Many People Wonder

why it is that glasses are worn more commonly in the present generation than in the past. Some say that the race is deteriorating, some that it is for style, but the real reason is that our modern civilization requires the eye to do more work than was even the case before. Consequently, the eyes, if in the least defective, may give you a lot of trouble, though in reality they are no worse than those of your grandfather who did not wear glasses till he was an old man. If you feel the least symptom of eyestrain, remember that it is nature's warning to you and consult us at once.

"THE LOVE PENDULUM"

BY MARION RUBINCAM

I GO BACK

Chapter 64
There were days and days to think over what Colin had said. He only spoke the truth, but the truth so often hurts! He only told me the things I should know, but the things I should know were not the things I wanted to hear.

However, I did try—though not as much as I should. But my music was no comfort. When I played the things I liked, they made me cry. I knew I was silly. I knew I was wrong—but I could not help it.

Colin came for a little while every day. We went for long walks in the afternoons occasionally, through the tantalizing warmth of the early spring sunshine.

"This is probably what you need," he remarked, "a very practical fashion: ones, 'Fresh air and sun and exercise. The spring is a time to rebuild. It's a time to hope and rebirth—you ought to cheer up now."

I looked out over the Park. The trees were breaking out in tiny leaves of the loveliest, softest green, and the shrubs were full of blossoms. Children and nursemaids were on all the paths. Everything and everybody seemed glad to be alive—but myself. And the very joy that was in the air only made me more miserable.

"Let's go back," I said suddenly. "I'm so tired."

"You shouldn't walk a mile yet. You shouldn't tire out so easily." We turned back, and went to my apartment, where I made tea for us. "Nature doesn't seem to be a restorative," Colin remarked, watching me while I poured out the tea. "You're as white as a ghost and you've blue lines under your eyes. Perhaps you need frivolity. There's a musical show opening tonight. Shall I get tickets?"

I agreed and we went to the theatre. When Colin came for me I had dressed in one of the prettiest gowns I had.

"I see we are to be frivolous tonight," he laughed. "Well, you look better than today, at least." But half way through the performance, a late party came into one of the boxes—fortunately, a box way across the house from us. We could see them plainly in the reflected glare of the footlights—Gwen, magnificent in a gown of a strange coral color, a man and woman new to me, and Winthrop! I might have known he would be there, for Win went to all first nights. He felt he really belonged to the city when he learned the names of all the "regulars" who never missed an opening performance—the mixture of critics, producers, actors, society people, would-be society people, and the vast fringes of each separate crowd that make up the audience of a first performance.

I caught hold of Colin's arm. "Let's go out, please, now," I said, "before the curtain goes down, while it's dark. Please hurry."

I pulled my cape around me and we slipped out unseen. I was weak and ill as we drove back to my place and Colin wanted to send Sonia in to stay with me because I looked so badly. But I would not let him, and spent the night roled up in a blanket on the couch, too miserable to take off my frock, and too miserable to care that I was running ill by crushing it.

What an enormous distance this was from those first happy days in Wellsville. I felt as sick now as the day I vaguely remembered being when I was first taken there. It was on just such a warm spring day as this had been that I remembered opening my eyes in the plain white and yellow room at the sanitarium.

How white I was then, after the long illness! I remembered when I first looked at myself in the mirror. I got up and found that very mirror and went back to the couch to look at myself again, wondering what changes these two years had made.

I was as white now as then. I stared at my eyes, dark blue and almost too large against the white of my cheeks. I fancied I looked much older. But my hair was fairly long by this time, it was ruffled and half undone, and it caught the light as I lay there and looked a very pretty gold color. I was pretty—much prettier than Gwen. Why should Winthrop have so suddenly lost his love for me? I thought for a long time about the days of convalescence in the sanitarium, and the happy period when I took the little white house and lived in the village there.

That house and that village stood for everything peaceful and lovely that I had known. I had been contented there, I had never been quite contented before or since.

I wanted to go back—even without Winthrop! I was going back—I would go in the morning and suddenly I felt better because I suddenly I had something to do. I got up and took off my dress. In the gray dawn I packed a couple of bags and a trunk, sent a wire to the sanitarium as soon as the telegraph office opened, breakfasted, and took the noon train to Wellsville.

"That evening I was sitting in the same dear old doctor's office. 'I'm not sick,' I kept repeating. 'But I'm so tired. I want to stay here.' Tears of weakness and nervous depression were running down my face. And the nice old doctor was smiling at me in a kindly and encouraging way."

ONE-FIFTH OF PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES HAVE NO RECTORS

(Associated Press.)
ST. LOUIS, Aug. 29.—More than one-fifth of the 924 United Presbyterian churches in the United States are without rectors, according to statistics compiled at the Xenia Theological Seminary here.

While there are 948 ministers of the denomination in this country, 191 churches are without rectors because of the large number of clergymen needed for school and home mission activities, and work of the denominational boards and agencies, it was explained.

WANT INDIANS IN OLYMPICS

(Associated Press.)

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 29.—Mexico should enter a few Tarahumara Indians in the coming Olympic Games at Paris and win every long distance running event, according to Dr. M. Ali, an authority on these primitive natives of Chihuahua. The Tarahumaras can run six marathons in a day, he declares, in describing the part that running figures in these Indians' religion. One of the Tarahumara hunters from the Mineral de Ocampo district has covered 90 kilometers in 24 hours, the doctor asserts.

SECRETS OF RICH RECLUSE

(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, Aug. 28.—A remarkable personality is revealed by details of the life of Richard Charles Jackson, the 70-years-old reclusive who died recently with only two dollars in his pocket and one dollar standing to his credit at the bank, though his house in Cambridge, was filled with treasures which were sold for nearly $50,000.

The two Rubens pictures which Mr. Jackson bequeathed to the nation have been accepted by the National Gallery and are now on view in the Flemish Room. "They are Rubens without a doubt," an official of the National Gallery said yesterday, "and we are very glad to have them." Mr. Jackson was believed to be the original of Walter Pater's romance, "Marius the Epicurean." He used to be known in the literary world. He published many books and was deeply religious.

His collection of books included a copy of Homer published in Venice in 1525 with more than 100 woodcuts. Twenty-four years ago he presented to the Southark Library a complete Dante library.

He was once wealthy and it is recorded that he spent a fortune in giving to the poor. "Nightly during the winter 'Comit d'Orsay's double,' he was called, might be seen in shabby attire on the Embankment seeking out the homeless and providing them with food and shelter."

Just over a year ago Mr. Jackson was seen by an old friend searching a book-stall in Farringdon-road for a volume of "Marius the Epicurean."

Among the articles from his house which were sold, in addition to books and pictures, was a wonderful collection of Persian carpets, some rare silver plates, a quantity of cut glass, and a beautiful Sheraton bookcase.

"He would not part with any of his treasures, although he was in need," said a relative. William Shopperley an old friend of Mr. Jackson, says he was an eccentric who lived in a world of dreams, but knew the value of his treasures. He had a delusion that he was a bishop of a Greek church in England.

"When I called to see him once he opened the door in gorgeous sacerdotal robes. I had interrupted a solemn High Mass celebrated and served by himself on a beautiful mediaeval altar. His service ended, he led me to luncheon on biscuits served on exquisite china. That at times he starved amid all his artistic wealth is certain. Every pound he received he would expend in bric-a-brac or a rare edition. He had no servant, no companion in the loneliness of his big house. A few friends sent him his mail, but his life was otherwise cheerless."

FINDS REFUGE IN CRIMEA

(Associated Press.)

SIMFEROPOL, Crimea, Aug. 29.—In a little hut high up in the mountains some 50 miles from Simferopol, S. Sergeeff Zensky, one of Russia's most widely known authors, is today living the life of a hermit.

To an Associated Press correspondent Zensky related recently the difficulties of being a hermit during a revolution, and spoke of his adventures during the numerous changes of regimes and the famine year in the Crimea.

"The famine here was very acute," he said. "The land had been devastated by civil war and numerous risings. It completed the ruination, and carried away a large portion of the population which was already depleted by the upheaval and by terror."

"I lived here quite happily from 1913 until the beginning of 1918. Then the Germans raided my little farm, and later the Bolsheviks. I had to take refuge in town, where I lived in hiding for a couple of months until I was able to secure from the authorities a 'guarantee of safety' paper. My live stock and cattle, which were confiscated during the period of my absence, were given back to me on my return, but they were unfit for work. Other changes of regimes, coupled with immutable Tartar risings, have each had their interests, and now the result is quite evident."

Pointing to a pile of timber and short beams in a corner of the room, Zensky said: "That, together with this little hut and one cow, is all that remains of my farm; all I have to leave to my family."

"Please tell the American people," continued Zensky, "that the Crimean population greatly admires the disinterested and self-sacrificing work of the American Relief Administration, as well as the humanitarian feelings of the American people. We are indeed grateful."

S. Sergeeff Zensky is one of the few Russian writers who stayed in Russia all through the years of revolution and civil war. He lives today the hard life of a poor man, and is cut off from the world of culture. He writes a great deal, and has just completed a romance entitled "Transfiguration," which deals with the development of Russia.
