INSIDIOUS EYE STRAIN

We use this adjective advisedly.

Sufferers from Eyestrain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any eye defect.

The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy.

Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eyestrain is present, a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes, through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy, may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body, and produce ill health.

WILD HORSES

By Henry Herbert Knibbs

CHAPTER XXII

"And we found eight empty shells and one of those little automatics on the floor. Seven of the shots had gone wild. The eighth, or maybe it was the first, got Johnny right between the shoulders. He didn't know that it was Percival got him. He thought it was the other man..." (From Undersheriff Owens's Report.)

The swiftly fading twilight accentuated the stillness and solemnity of the high country. The small kerosene lamp in Johnny Trent's cabin illuminated the faces of the three, gathered about the table as though waiting for something to break the natural pause in conversation following the evening meal. Johnny rose and cleared away the dishes and stacked them on the sink shelf near the stove. Grace Percival sat with her hands folded in her lap, gazing pensively at her slim, white fingers, and especially at a jeweled platinum ring, a trinket worth more money than Johnny Trent could earn in a year of hard work. She had purchased the ring herself, and occasionally wore it, and because Percival had tried to buy jewelry for her, which she refused to accept, the broker observed her preoccupation frowningly. She ought to be wearing his rings, he knew, and jewelry and such things, Percival grew aware that she was then quite unaware of his presence. Her habit of drifting into day-dreams had always irritated him. He could never understand why one person in company with another should not talk. She could talk entertainingly when she chose.

While the lack of convention in the appointments of the queer cabin annoyed him, Percival felt that somehow the place was a home, and he attributed this to Grace Percival's presence. And he felt safer in her presence—free to assume his old, blustering importance, and say what he thought. And this man Trent, of whom he so recently had been afraid: why, the fellow was actually boorish in his silence. He seemed depressed, aware of his uncleanliness. Now was the time to show him up, and let Grace see what sort of a man he really was.

Percival ran his thick finger round the inside of his collar. "Well what have you got to say?" Percival's manner was that of a cross-examining attorney who knows that the court will countenance almost anything from him except physical violence. In this case—so the broker assumed—Grace Percival was the court, and the man hiding in the forest, the constable. Johnny found it exceedingly difficult to keep his temper, yet he held to the main issue, chiefly because both Grace Percival and the broker were guests in his home.

Percival misinterpreted Johnny's awkward restraint. Assuming that the deputy would soon make his appearance, the broker became

"So you're sick of all this Western bunk, eh? Well, I don't blame you. And your bandit friend, here! Why, he's licked, right now." Grace Percival rose. "Sam, I wish you wouldn't make a fool of yourself." Then she turned to Johnny. "It is my fault—all my fault! I know you can never forgive me. I thought I cared for you when you told me about the wild horses, and the gray stallion. But when you went away, and I realized that I could never marry you—Grace Percival hesitated, then swiftly, gracefully, she drew the jeweled ring from her finger. "Please take it as a keepsake. You risked your life to catch the gray stallion for me. Surely you have earned it."

Johnny shook his head. "I don't need that to remember you by." He turned away, swung round again. "You can have the cabin to-night, Grace. Mr. Percival can sleep in the lean-to, back to the house. I'll have horses ready for you in the morning." (To Be Continued) ponderously subtle. "I suppose you sleep with that belt and gun on you," he said, "but you don't need it when you are talking to a gentleman." Johnny refrained from making the obvious rejoinder. He unbuckled his belt and hung the holstered gun on the wall. He turned toward Percival. "I fetched you up here to tell you that I took Miss Percival from the Solano stage, that night, and that she came up here against her will. I asked her to marry me and she said she wouldn't. I'm taking all the blame for this deal. She couldn't help herself. Once I thought maybe she liked me pretty well—but she don't care anything about me. It was my mistake. I had no business letting myself get to care for her. She never gave me a reason to think I ought to care for her." Percival gestured impatiently. "What's the use of telling me that stuff? Money's what you're after. I offered a reward for the discovery of Miss Percival. I'll write you a check and we'll call it square."

"No, you won't," said Johnny. "It isn't a question of money, at all," declared Grace Percival. "Then I suppose it's a case of love at first sight, or something like that? Well, don't you forget I've got something to say as executor of your estate. You are my ward, and until you are married, the bulk of your estate is invested according to my judgment." Percival saw the flush that darkened Johnny Trent's face, and he smiled.

Grace Percival turned twirly to the broker. "You haven't a right to disturb one cent of my money—and you never had. And you needn't mention it again. I am going back with you. There is nothing else to do. But that is my own decision, not yours."

"So you're sick of all this Western bunk, eh? Well, I don't blame you. And your bandit friend, here! Why, he's licked, right now." Grace Percival rose. COLOR CUT-OUTS Old Mother Goose

A FINE YOUNG LADY

This is one day's part of the famous old Mother Goose poem. Children who have cut out and colored these paper dolls every day this week will have a complete set of them tomorrow to go with the story of the poem.

Then Jack went a-courting
A lady so gay,
As fair as the Hy,
And sweet as the May.

The rogue and the squire
Came behind his back,
And began to belabor
The sides of poor Jack.

The pretty young lady has golden hair and pink cheeks. Her dress should be a light green, with hose to match. Watch for another dress for her tomorrow. (Copyright, 1925, Associated Editors, Inc.)

The "Guardian Election Contest" with its magnificent list of prizes for the successful subscribers who may be fortunate enough to make a good estimate of the total vote that will be polled in the forthcoming Federal Election, promises to be a lively issue. There is a peculiar fascination in the contest of this kind.

The continued rainy weather has retarded to some extent the work on the land. In Dr. Miles' Calendar we have a pretty correct forecast of the weather for this Spring. Can it be that ere long we will know a year ahead what is in store for us in that line from a consultation of the weather bureau?

The lobster fishermen, having finished all their preparatory work, are now quite at home in their native element, and from the meagre information to hand it would indicate a prosperous season for 1925.

The manager of Graham and Llewellyn's factory at Boughton Island reports an average of about 300 lobsters per day to each boat, and 15 cases were put up in one day shortly after the lines were run.

Make Yourself Efficient!

YOU cannot be efficient when your whole digestive system is in rebellion. Dizziness and that dreadful sense of fullness up to the end of the tongue are signs of congestion. And the result—a headache that is felt in one or both eyes; a morose, petulant and garrulous temper, with the inevitable result that you cannot give to your work or your business the careful thought and judgment required.

You cannot afford to be in this condition. You owe it to yourself to use a Laxative that will relieve the cause—constipation. You can depend on that great builder of health—DR. CALDWELL'S LAXATIVE SYRUP PEPSIN to relieve constipation.

MALPEQUE

Mr. and Mrs. Peter G. Clark and their sons, Robert and James, of Summerside, motored to Malpeque on Sunday, May 30.

Rev. George Millar, of New London congregation, and Rev. A. N. Gillis, of Princetown congregation, preached pulpits on Sunday evening, May 4th. There was a large audience in Malpeque church and the service was much enjoyed. Mr. Millar purposes leaving shortly for New Brunswick, and his many friends here were pleased to have a farewell message from him.

Mrs. Roberts and grandchild, of Dorchester, Mass., arrived in Malpeque Saturday evening and the guests of Mrs. Roberts' sister, Mrs. J. K. MacGougan.

The weather for lobster fishing has been most unfavorable, but the catch on Monday was reported as being good, one fisherman securing seven hundred and fifty-one lbs.

There are many places that are desirable for one to locate in, but there is no place with a more splendid record for hospitality or more generous in lending aid than the community of Malpeque. There has been a splendid evidence of the maintenance of this record during the past ten days in the erection of a barn on Mr. Thomas McNutt's farm to replace the one destroyed by fire on Nov. 27th, 1924. The friends and neighbors have lent their generous aid through the preparatory stages of the work and for several days they came en masse, and the barn will soon be sufficiently advanced to house the

When some days out, however, she developed appendicitis and peritonitis. She was immediately given the very best of attention by the ship's surgeon, Dr. A. Burns, but succumbed to heart failure brought on by her acute illness. The body was committed to the deep sea on the following day May 1, at six o'clock in the morning, with all the officers and a number of the passengers present, the impressive service being conducted by Rev. George Adam, formerly of the Emmanuel church, Montreal, who was returning to Canada.

Canada Approves Of The Protocol

OTTAWA, May 6.—With very little debate the House of Commons this afternoon approved the protocol between Canada and the United States regulating the level of the Lake of the Woods.

The resolution as adopted also approves letters of reference submitted to the International Joint Commission on the regulation of levels of Rainy Lake, between Ontario and Minnesota. The resolution was then sent to the Senate for approval.

Cars Registered In Canada

OTTAWA, May 6.—An increase of 65,271 in the total number of motor vehicles registered in Canada is shown for the last year, as compared with 1923.

The total number aggregated 652,121.

Drivers' licenses showed a decrease in Manitoba, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. A large decrease, which occurred in Quebec, was due principally, it is stated, to the new requirements of a guarantee bond of $5,000 to obtain a license.

MORE HUMOURS OF HISTORY

By ARTHUR MORELAND

No. 89, Becket, Chancellor

A. D. 1157.—Thomas a Becket was appointed Chancellor. He outshone the King in the magnificence of his retinue, and the incident of Henry plucking the rich cloak from Becket's shoulders and giving it to a beggar was probably a sly intimation. In 1162 Henry, for the purpose of checking the growing power of the Church, appointed Becket Archbishop of Canterbury.
