Periodic—Eye Examinations

Don't wear your glasses for five or ten years, as some do, without re-examination, for in that time serious changes are vitally important, whether one's eyes are good or otherwise.

may take place, which if not discovered, may work permanent injury to the most precious sense you possess.

Guard your eyes.

The Crippled Lady of Peribonka

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
(Copyright, 1929, by Doubleday, Doran, and Co. Inc.)

From the hour Paul opened his eyes to the light of life he had in him the soul of an Indian. After a hundred and thirty five years the blood of the lovely Molly Brant had come into its own. One would not have guessed it from the boy's physical appearance, for he was light, rather than dark, with blue eyes and blond hair. But the modern Molly, who lived in a palace, with a Croesus for a husband, saw what was happening as the years passed by. Her boy grew lean of face and figure. His cheek bones were a little high. His love for the outdoors became a passion. She made it possible for him to spend his vacations in the woods, and each time he returned she knew that something had been taken away from him and a little more of the other thing put in its place. The servants thought he was queer, and loved his quiet and stoical kindness, which was many years older than his age. Most boys would have lived up to the princely grandeur of his environment. To Paul it meant less than a tree with birds singing in its branches.

In his thirteenth year came three events of vital importance in the shaping of his future. First his mother died. No one would ever know the terrible, unhealing wound it cut in Paul's heart. It was James Kirke, the hardened and power-seeking juggernaut of flesh and blood who went to pieces when he discovered that death had been fear-ess enough to cross his path. His agony was like a storm, tragic for a time, and quickly over. He settled back into the fierce strife of his money getting by the time Paul began to grieve. But the shadow and the fact of death changed him a little. He saw himself alone, except for his son. And this son, after years of passing interest on his part, became the kernel of his plans and ambitions. He was now king. Some day his boy would be king. And it was his desire and his decision that he should be a greater king than himself. Pride fired his resolution.

But here the geographical genius of Fate again stepped in with humors of its own. In another Fifth avenue home a baby girl was born to the wife of Kirke's most implacable financial enemy, Henry Durand. A few months later, three thousand miles or more away, an immigrant ship left for America. On board this ship was a clear-eyed hopeful woodcutter from the mountain country of central Europe. With him were his wife and baby. They were an unimportant three. The sea might have swallowed them and no one would have cared very much, for their adventure was only one of millions of a similar kind. The immigrant baby's fortune began and ended with the few little clothes she wore. The other baby was worth millions one second after she came into the world.

Paul continued to grow up, and with equal steadiness his father continued to amass a fortune and influence. It was his passion to smash and break down, then devour and build up—until some one called him the Anaconda, a name which fitted him so well that the newspapers would have used it had they dared. Kirke was always within the legal boundaries of his country's laws. He absorbed shipping companies, railroads, coal mines, and timberlands, and sent out his engineers to corner vast water-power rights. From an industrial point of view he was constructively an asset, for wherever he broke down or consumed small activities he built up larger ones. But morally and ethically his brain was inspired by a covetous and avid desire to rule. He was intolerant of rivalry, and this brought him each year in closer and more deadly contact with the equally far-reaching interests of Henry Durand. The titan's struggle between these two Gollaths of financial and industrial activities is a part of Wall street history. The more interesting story of Paul and the two babies is known only to a few, chiefly about Lac St. Jean.

STATUE TO A JERSEY COW

A statue to the first Jersey cow to produce over a thousand pounds of butter fat in the state stands before a creamery building in Ontario, California.

It was erected by her proud and grateful owner who felt that his "Imperial Isobel" deserved honor for the record of 1,045 pounds of fat from 15,702 pounds of milk in a year. She was sculptured in cement and so naturally that dogs bark at her and try to drive her from the pedestal.

The work was done by Martha Cathcart Ayres at Los Angeles, well known for her artistic sculpturing of children. This, however, was a peculiarly difficult task because the usual method of forming first in clay and then casting in cement could not be followed as the animal was wanted in natural colors. The slenderness of the ankles to support so large a frame was also a problem.

A steel framework, slightly smaller than life size was made—a skeleton of steel as it were—upon which the cement was plastered. The statue is in exact size and bearing Isobel's own markings of auburn poll, black feet and tail, brown legs and face, pink udder, white back and fawn colored sides. Imperial Isobel still lives, no longer a prize winner among the fine herd she has mothered, but well worthy of this honor—the only cow to have a statue in any animal Hall of Fame.

FAT MAN LOSES 63lbs

Kruschen and Walking

Overweight men who want to lose a few pounds can have the benefit of this man's experiences. He gives them to us for publication:—
"In a little over twelve months I have reduced my weight from 227 lbs. to 164 lbs, by taking a dose of Kruschen Salts every morning for six months, and taking walking exercise every day. This remarkable achievement is all the more interesting when one considers that I did not resort to any form of dieting."—G. L. B.
You can take off fat with Kruschen Salts if you will take one-half teaspoon in hot water every morning before breakfast, modify your diet, and exercise regularly. While you are losing fat you will be gaining in energy—in endurance—in ambition. The old arm chair won't hold you any more—you'll want to be up and doing—you'll enjoy work and active recreation and you'll sleep like a top. You'll lose fat, and probably live years longer.

though he filled an important chair in medicine in Johns Hopkins. He nodded to Paul, dropped off his rubber coat, and began to fill his pipe as he looked out over the workings.

"I wish all the boys in the world could stand in this window and see what's going on down there," he said. "That idea gets into my head every time I come here. It would fill 'em with ambition, show 'em what can be done, give 'em something to live and work for. Rotten day, isn't it?"

"Rotten," agreed Paul. "But for a man who's done that—it ought to be sunshine all the time," added Derwent, lighting his pipe and puffing at it with great contentment. "Splendid work, Paul. Something to be proud of all your life. Something—"

"I hate it," interrupted Paul. "I've hated it from the beginning. I've hated it for three years."

Derwent nodded. "I know it." (To Be Continued)

BURNT PASTRY

If you are unfortunate enough to burn the pastry on a fruit or meat, the damage can be partly remedied by scraping off the burnt part with a fine grater. Brush away all the crumbs with a dry pastry brush. Lightly coat the surface with egg and milk and return to the oven to glaze. If you are in a tremendous hurry you can grate off the burnt part with a brush of the crumbs and then brush with egg and milk and return to the oven to glaze.
