ORGANIST REMEMBERED—The many friends of Mrs. Margaret Mellett of Union Road gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Mellett on October 1, to say farewell to Margaret as she leaves to go to her new residence in Charlottetown. She was escorted to the chair of honor by Mr. Keith Bryenton. Meeting was called to order by Rev. T. A. Wilson who after a few well chosen remarks called upon Mrs. Grace MacLeat to read a very appropriate address on behalf of the Community, which expressed their regret at having to lose not only an organist but a valuable church and Sunday school worker. Mrs. Mellett was then presented with a lovely electric lamp, by Miss Norma Yeo for which she thanked one and all in a few well chosen words. All joined in singing "For She" a Jolly Good Fellow, after which she was soundly bounced. Lunch was served by the hostess and the remainder of the evening spent in singing and games.

Rural Adventure

By Cameron Dockery CHAPTER IV

"Heavy set, small, pale blue eyes, thick, blond, straight hair, he rather Nordic looking and may pose as a Swede or Norwegian." "I'll watch for him tonight. How will I get in touch with you?"

"You can't be seen or heard talking to me once you've established a contact. If they are at all suspicious, they'll watch you like hawks, I wouldn't even trust Chloe too far." His mouth set grimly.

"But I'll have to let you know." "If you find out anything, put an ad in the personal column of the P-Examiner."

She laughed excitedly. "This has all the elements of a real mystery! Suddenly he arose. Some sight-seers were entering the famous little graveyard, examining over the unusual epitaphs. He seemed very tall as he pulled his cap down at her seriously.

Then he turned swiftly on his heel and was gone. An aura of tenseness surrounded Lotus as she dressed for the next evening performance. The air was thick and sultry and even the few wandering breezes that blew in from the waterfront were warm and laden with the odors of decaying fruits and fish. She had little appetite for the supper that the mulatto girl brought in on a tray. Chloe Duval was nowhere to be seen.

Lotus had forced herself to eat something and was standing before the open door leading to the narrow balcony of her room when a sudden puff of wind set a small black object rolling across the floor. It was one of Chloe Duval's miniature cigars! A sharp stab of panic caught Lotus and she sat down, till holding the dry, half-smoked cheroot between her fingers. So Chloe had taken advantage of her absence the visit her room! What did it mean? Was Mamselle Duval simply seizing an opportune moment to satisfy a natural feminine curiosity? Or had some forgotten incident aroused her suspicions as to the true identity of Rose Kirkman? Lotus looked around her... Before leaving Washington she had removed all labels from her clothing, purchased new shoes, and discarded anything else that might give her away. No trace of Lotus Ames remained but a straw-berry mark on her left hip and that was a secret shared only with the files of the F. B. I. Calm returned with mental deduction and she decided that the older woman had merely responded to a normal inquisitiveness or perhaps had entered the room to call down from the balcony to one of her many acquaintances engaged in business along the waterfront. But this last explanation started a new trend of ideas entirely... That evening the cafe was crowded with the usual polyglot collection of customers. As she went through her numbers her eyes searched carefully over the audience but it was not until midnight that she spied her objective emerging from the arched entrance to seat himself at a table nearby. He was not alone. A short, dark man, with the sharp features and darting eyes of a weasel, accompanied him and waited until the other had selected a chair before setting himself. He was dressed like a salesman, and after a brief consultation with the Bundist, called to a waiter and ordered drinks. This was the moment Lotus had planned since talking to Lawrence that afternoon. Two Planting Methods To Keep Bulbs Over Winter

The Dutch Method of Planting Bulbs is Used When There Are No Other Plants to Consider.

There are two methods of planting fall bulbs. When planted in the perennial border, among other plants, a hole should be dug for each bulb with a trowel. Be sure that the hole is large enough so that the bulbs rest on the soil, and there is no air pocket beneath it. The soil should be packed firmly around and above the bulb, and planting may be done as late as it is possible. Even if there is a crust of frost on the surface, so long as the soil beneath will crumble easily, planting can continue. But when the ground freezes deep enough to prevent this, it is too late to plant. If an entire bed, or border space is to be planted to bulbs, it may be excavated to the required depth, and the bulbs placed on the floor of the excavation in the desired arrangement. This is a necessary method when tulips are to be used to form a pattern, in the style still popular in Europe and formerly practiced here. Even if not planted in this manner, it is a good way when there are no established plants in the area to interfere with it. This is called the Dutch method because it is used in Holland not only for garden beds but also in the tulip fields. When the soil is filled in above the bulbs it should be heaped up an inch or two higher than the surrounding surface to allow for settling, and prevent a depression in which water might stand. Wet soil is the great enemy of all garden bulbs. They will not grow in wet soil, and soon decay. They should never be planted in a place from which water does not drain away quickly. If there is no such place in your garden, then make an elevated bed, six inches above the garden level, in which to plant your bulbs. Cold does not injure hardy bulbs, but wet soil will destroy them, so take no chances.

WHENCE NAMED

Legend has it that "cocktail" is an Aztec word and that "the liquor" was discovered by a Toltec noble, who sent it by the hand of his daughter, Xochitl, to the king, who promptly named it "Xochitl," whence "cocktail."
