CHURCH SERVICES

TRINITY UNITED CHURCH

The services at Trinity United Church both morning and evening were largely attended despite the oppressive weather and the absence of so many people from the City. Rev. Hammond Johnson is on holiday in the country, and Rev. Dr. Ramsay preached at both services. The subject in the morning was "Spiritual Growth". Mrs. Montgomery Jones of St. John, N. B., a sister of Mrs. Ramsay, wife of Rev. Dr. Ramsay sang "Hamblen's "Beside Still Waters," and the Choir gave the Anthem "God is a Spirit". At the evening service, Rev. Dr. Ramsay's subject was, "The Final Stand of Faith". Miss Florence Ings sang, Prof. W. E. Fletcher's arrangement of "Lead Kindly Light", and Prof. Fletcher played as an Offertory "In the Cloisters" by Leo Torrance.

The Choir intend holding their annual picnic at Malpeque on Friday of this week.

CHRISTIAN-McCARTHY

Miss Agnes Louise McCarthy and Norman J. Christian were married this morning at a nuptial High Mass, celebrated by Rev. Fr. D. F. Sheedy, at St. John's Church, Atleboro, Mass., at 8 o'clock. The double ring service was used. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the beautiful new home of Mrs. Thomas Trainor, 59 Great George Street, sister of the bride. Mrs. Hannah McKearney was matron of honour, and Thomas Trainor, brother-in-law of the bride supported the groom. The bride and groom were the recipients of many and beautiful presents. $100.00 cheque from Mr. H. K. Richardson, of the Richardson Insurance Co., with whom she has been employed for the past seven years, a set of dishes consisting of one hundred pieces from Mrs. H. K. Richardson, an electric outfit from Mr. and Mrs. Caster Brooks and many other lovely presents too numerous to mention.

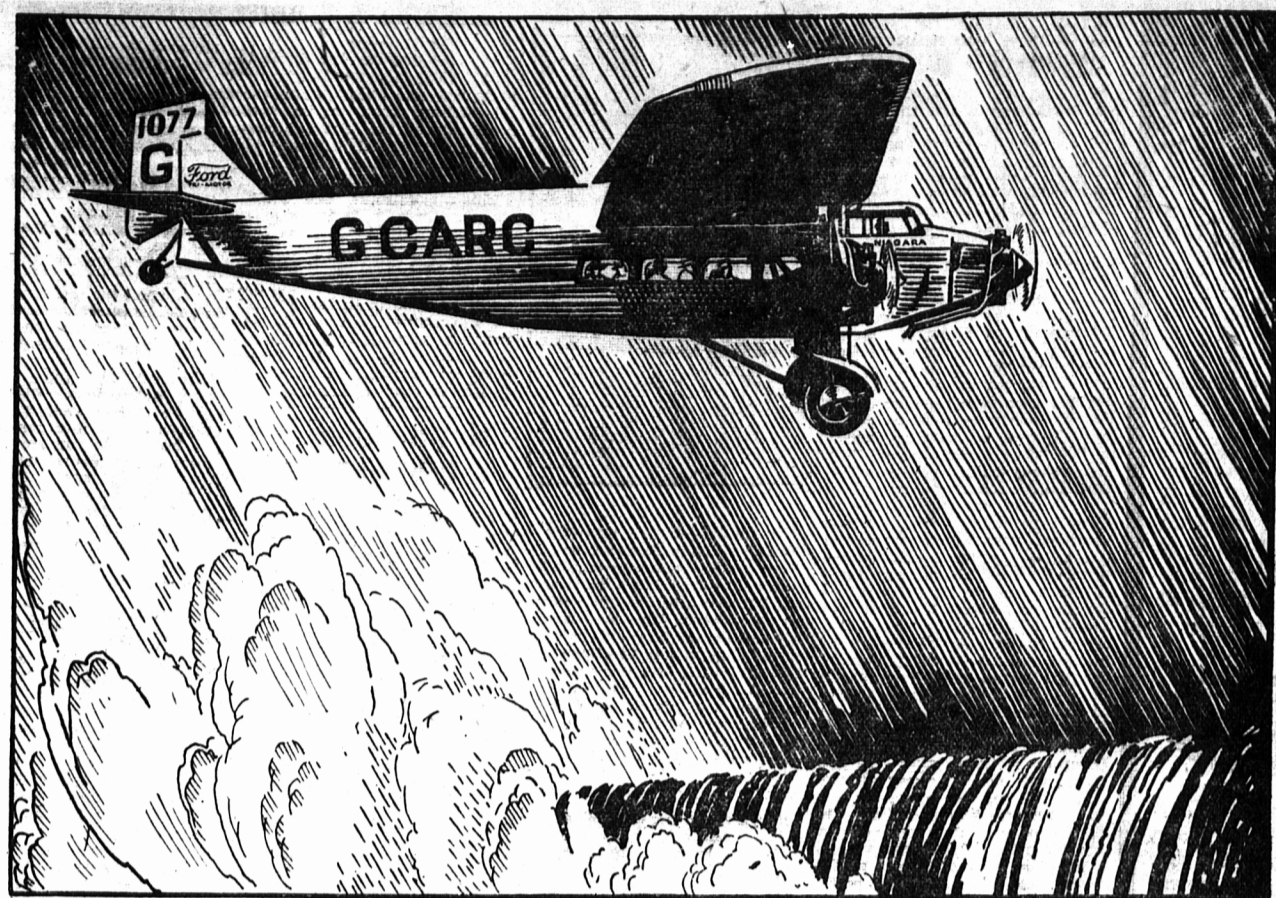

The bride's dress was of white crepe with net veil and she carried a bouquet of white bridal roses and lilies of the valley, while the groom's dress was of pink georgette with pink hat and her bouquet was of pink carnations.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McCarthy of Sturgeon, Prince Edward Island, and a sister of Mrs. Ernest McTague, of Charlottetown. Prince Edward Island. The groom is a native of Nova Scotia where his mother still resides. He has been making his home at Mulberry Street, Atleboro, and is employed as a jeweller at the Robbins Co. After a honeymoon trip to New York Mr. and Mrs. Christian will make their home at 8 Major Street.

Largest Air Transport uses this Better Oil

Sky View Lines Limited, operating passenger airplane services over Niagara Falls and to Toronto and other Canadian points, standardizes on Marvelube Motor Oil.

Sky View Lines transports 5,000 passengers monthly in its Ford-Stout tri-motor all metal plane "Niagara"—the plane which flew to the rescue of the Bremen fliers at Greenly Island.

"In the interests of safety and efficiency" says Major J. O.

Leach, Director of Operations, "we use Marvelube Motor Oil and Imperial Gasoline exclusively. We carefully analysed samples of Marvelube after protracted service and found it to be in perfect condition.

"We thoroughly check our motors at frequent intervals and these inspections convince us that in Marvelube we have an oil of outstanding quality perfectly suited to the most exacting requirements of our airplane motors."

FOX FARMERS

Feed lettuce to your foxes. American fox ranchers are feeding lettuce largely and have wonderful results. Lettuce contains valuable vitamins very essential at this season. The wild foxes are able to choose their green food—but the ranch breed—many of them die, for the lack of this very important diet. We have been feeding lettuce for the last three years with the best result. We are offering lettuce at a special low price to all fox ranchers intelligent and discerning enough to recognize a good thing. J. J. and charm, soon became a favorite. Four years later she was married at St. George's, Hanover Square, to a man from Mrs. Usher's native Aberdeen, to Alexander Bannerman, a banker, a manufacturer and a wine merchant, solid, dependable, untinted.

Bannerman's prosperity was not as substantial as Mrs. Usher had hoped and in the middle of the century he was glad to accept a post with remuneration, and was sent out to Prince Edward Island as the Queen's deputy. So it was that half a century after she had been hurried off the Island by a debt-ridden father, Margaret returned to the salute of guns, to take up her residence in the great, gracious, Government House which stood not many steps from the little red brick house in which she had been born. Bannerman had been knighted before he crossed the sea, and Margaret was now Lady Bannerman, a truly remarkable woman, deeply religious, intensely interested in education and with a heart tender for the underprivileged. She was by far the greater personality of the two, for her husband has been described as "simple and guileless as a school-boy" while she in turn was described as one of the few women of her century to possess so wide a grasp of culture or so keen an intellect. Bannerman died a few years later, unregretted by at least one man in London. Carlyle, with all the disdain of an intellectual giant, wrote of Bannerman with a pen that dripped scorn. "A year or so after," he says, "we heard that the fair Margaret had married some rich, insignificant Aberdeen Mr. Something, who afterwards got into parliament, went to Nova Scotia or so as 'Governor' and I heard of her no more except that lately she was still living in Aberdeen childless, a Dowager Lady—her Mr. Something having got knighted before dying."

He knew perfectly well who Bannerman was and frequently made inquiries concerning him and his affairs. He never made any secret of his love for Margaret Gordon and even Jane Welsh was perfectly well aware of it, having learned it from his own lips. Yet he never trusted himself to meet her as he could so easily have done in London, not even toward the end of their lives when each was living out a solitary distinguished old age. He lived in Chelsea, in London, on the north side of the river, she lived at Greenwich, a few miles away on the south side. Margaret was left as dependent at the end of her life as she was at the beginning. Bannerman's resources had not been as long as they should have been. Margaret was an overgenerous philanthropist and all that she possessed went into her charities. Writing of those last days, Ada MacLeod, of Prince Edward Island says: "There were intimate friends, Mrs. Halliburton, the widow of 'Sara Slick' Mrs. Prowse, mother of the historian of Newfoundland, two friends of old Prince Edward Island days, daughters of Lemuel Cambridge, and General Gordon, who was in command of the Royal Engineers at Gravesend. The last mentioned was especially a confidante with her in re-

gious and philanthropic work and while Gordon sent some of his medals to the melting pot in the cause of charity, it is a fact that Lady Bannerman sold all her jewels for the benefit of the poor—with one exception, a miniature of her aunt Mrs. Usher, set in forget-me-nots of diamonds."

A Relic and a Recollection.

There was one other relic of other days that Lady Bannerman did not part with—it was a simple littleagate cross, sent to her from Carlyle after the last of their letters had been written, by the hand of Edward Irving, who loved them both. The little cross never left her in the sixty years that intervened before her death, through the days when she moved through society as a fashionable London dame, through the days in Greenwich, where her widowhood was spent upon the bounty of a half sister.

"Such beings," said Carlyle, "are the shadows, the radiant shadows that cross our paths in this dark voyage; we gaze upon them with rapture for a moment and pass away, borne on by the tide of fate, never to behold them, never more." And then of Blumh's lover, he writes: "He loved but once, not wisely, but too well, and once only. Each human heart can properly exhibit but one love, if even one, the first love which is infinite and can be followed by no second like unto it." But Margaret is silent. No scrap of Carlyle's letters survive, not a word fell from her lips, even to her nearest and dearest. She died in Greenwich in 1878 and Carlyle followed her two years later. Another half century has passed and in Chelsea the old Sage sits in imperishable bronze, and in Charlottetown still stands the great white house to which Margaret Gordon carried her secret and her agate cross. If only walls could speak!
