75 YEARS OF CRAFTSMANSHIP

IN 1889, when Robert McLaughlin launched his carriage and wagon shop in Enniskillen, he did so with the determination that the work produced there would be as flawless as his care and integrity could make it.

When his sons, years later, converted the thriving carriage works into General Motors of Canada, they were guided by the same far-sighted policy - that into the making of their cars and trucks, the modern counterparts of Robert McLaughlin's wagon and carriages, would go proved materials, precise knowledge, and painstaking attention to detail.

This rigid adherence to all that craftsmanship implies has served Canada well. GM's civilian cars and trucks have kept rolling, have carried extra loads, saved precious hours and energy during these critical war years.

On the battle fronts of the world, GM's military vehicles and weapons of war have withstood powerful punishment and unusual wear and tear. Skilled woodworkers who, long years before had helped Robert McLaughlin fashion carriages of enduring quality, have been called out of retirement to put the same workmanship into the wooden fuselages of incredibly fast Mosquito Bombers.

And after Victory, when General Motors reconverts to peacetime requirements, Canadians can look forward with confidence to the continuance of fine craftsmanship in GM's production of "More and Better Things for More People".
