WORD FROM GLORIA.

Chapter 96.

"But Gloria will be back!" Pan said. Frankie presented no problem to her. "Not for weeks—I saw them in Paris, before I came over." "Oh, tell me—you never said a word!" she reproached him. "Were they happy?—Was Gloria happy? Do you like Santley now he's back?" "I've always liked him. I used to know him very well, in the old days," George said. "I always knew he was in love with Gloria. We were both with her, trying to keep up her courage in the dreadful time when she was making up her mind to break loose and go to New York. He was glad then that my horse was American, so I could keep an eye on her. He was ready to quit over here and go back, but she wouldn't have it."

"I know." "I was her guardian in his eyes. When you used to see me annoyed with her it was because of the senseless way she wasted her time on me—on me, people and her strength and nerve force on foolish parties. When she would get keyed up and nervous—" "You would glare at her, I've seen you," interrupted Pan. "I was glad of you for a time because I saw that would be a quiet force with Gloria, sort of a sedative to keep her down when you were together. Later I was glad that Gloria could be of use to you—when I began to fall in love with you." "When was that?" asked the girl, deserting one topic for another more fascinating. "I don't know—sometimes. I think from the time I first saw you huddle behind a gorgeous sofa cushion, because you were ashamed of your own feet. I remember the time I think only from the night you brought me a hot supper and insisted on my eating it."

Pan laughed, then demanded, "Now, go on about Gloria." "Gloria? Oh yes—well, on night while I was at work I had a phone call from Santley, asking me to dine with them. We spent the whole evening talking—and most of the night, there was a lot to say. Happy? I should say she was!" "Quieter?" "Yes, steadier that is, not so apt to fly off the handle as she used to be."

"I can't imagine Gloria really quiet," Pan said thoughtfully. "I didn't say she was quiet—there was plenty of gaiety, but not the nervous sort of gaiety, but the sort of gaiety that you'll see. They were going to the south and Italy. I told them they'd melt, but they didn't seem to mind. Gloria says that she's going to all the places where she was unhappy before, just to see what they're really like, now that she can see them as they are."

"Laying ghosts," Pan said, thinking of some of the long talks between George and her friend. "Laying ghosts! But it will take another month at least, there are many of them to lay. That's why I said Frankie was a problem." "But—won't be married before she—before they come back?" "A month! Are you going to make me wait a month?" Pan laughed a little at that. "I hadn't thought—this is all so new to me. I'll marry you whenever you say. But it seems so old."

She broke off and looked at him. "What seems odd, sweetheart?" "The idea of marrying you. I'd really be your wife, wouldn't I?" "I hope so—unless you think an English clergyman can't do it up properly. In that case we'll have to embark soon for home."

"No, I didn't mean that. It's just the idea of being your wife—Sudden tears were near the surface again. "Don't you see? It's so much happiness, so much more than I deserve, so much more than I ever thought would come to me!" Her eyelids trembled a little, it seemed for a moment as though the tears would come, they had been near the surface all evening. "I loved you so much, I knew I would be perfectly happy if you were. I would have been, if you had married Gloria—it wouldn't have been as you think, my mind telling me I should be happy, while my heart wanted you—" "My happiness is with you," he said, with an arm around her. "Then I'm doubly happy. I'll grow used to it—and be selfish about it too, in time. Happiness makes one selfish," she said with a wisdom old in 22. Her dark eyes were shining and the little face that was even too slender most of the time, was vividly alight with her joy. George thought her most beautiful—as she was when she was well and happy, she had an elfin quality of face and figure. That was more than mere beauty. "We'll be married this week," he said suddenly. "Will you have to bother about trousseaux and things? Get it after you're married—I shan't tell Gloria until she comes back here. But what shall we do with Frankie?" "Take him along," answered Pan.

BLACK AND RED PYGMIES

The existence of Pygmies in Africa is recorded by Herodotus, the Greek Historian who described them as "a nation of little men who wore garments made of palm leaves." Hundreds of years later the explorer Stanley saw them in the gloom of a central African forest and held an interview with one of their princesses. Later Capt Burrows of the Congo State came across these little freaks more than once. There are black pygmies and red pygmies. The bodies of the red pygmies are not so hairy as those of the negroes but the blacks are covered with down. The pygmy is an excellent archer. He will shoot three or four arrows one after the other, with such rapidity that the last will have left the bow before the first has reached its goal. When an arrow reaches its mark the pygmy flies into a violent passion, breaking his bow and arrow in his rage. When it hits he pats his left arm with his right hand and chuckles.

MT. ALBION SCHOOL

The semi-annual examination of Mt. Albion school was held on Thursday, June 29th. There was a large number of parents and visitors present, which showed the interest taken in the school. The pupils were examined in the various subjects, by their teacher, Miss Shaw, and showed by their prompt and ready answers the careful training received. Complimentary remarks were made by trustees and others who complimented the teacher on the excellent work she had done, after which an address was read by Miss Martina Chandler and Miss Hilda Stewart resented the teacher with a fountain pen, a hand bag and box of stationery.

Following is the address: Dear Teacher.—It is with deep regret that we, the pupils of Mt. Albion School, learn of your intended departure from our midst. As our teacher in the past year we have always found you faithful in your endeavors to make us better citizens of the world and you have shown us the necessity of striving to win an education worth having. We still hope that you will some day in the near future come back to us, if not as a teacher as a neighbor. We now ask you to accept this token of our appreciation of your work as a teacher and friend. Wishing you always success in years to come whatever your lot may be. Signed on behalf of the pupils of Mt. Albion School.

"A Wee Doch and Doris"

If the Scottish Celebration at Scotchfort had been held before Prohibition had come in force the mark of Sociability would have been "A Wee Doch and Doris. In fact such a custom is time honored and hard to substitute. However one of the remarkable points of the Celebration was the way the "Scots" took to "BRIGHTON ICE CREAM. Ladies and men spent many hours exchanging confidences over a dish of "BRIGHTON" ICE CREAM. It makes Brawny Scots because "Its a Food."

GLYCERINE REMOVES STAINS.

Many kinds of stains on table linen can be successfully removed by applying glycerine. The glycerine should be put on with a sponge and allowed to soak in for a few minutes. Then rinse in plain water. The most obstinate mark should disappear. If the first treatment is not entirely successful, place a small vessel with a little glycerine in it in hot water. When the glycerine is quite warm apply in the way described, and in nearly all cases the desired result is obtained. Glycerine may be safely used in this way for stains on delicate and colored fabrics such as georgette or nylon stuff. Rubbing should not be resorted to if injury is to be avoided.

Small Chair in the Kitchen

A small chair, such as is used in kindergartens, is a convenience in the kitchen. When preparing fruits and vegetables for canning it is more comfortable to sit in a low chair with the pans around on the floor than to sit in a high chair that tires the arms and shoulders by reaching up to the table height. By standing on this chair many things just out of reach may be obtained without having to strain or stretch or having to lift a heavy chair to stand on.

PAINS IN BACK AND SIDES

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindsay, Ontario—"I used to have very bad pains in my back and sides and often was not fit to do my work. I tried many medicines but before I began to take yours, I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the "Toronto Globe" and now that it has helped me I recommend it to all of my neighbors. Keep it in the house all the time and take it once in a while no matter how well I feel, for one ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."—ELIZABETH CAMPBELL, 13 St. Paul St., Lindsay, Ont. To do any kind of work—and you know there is much to be done—it is next to impossible if you are suffering from some form of female trouble. It may cause your back to ache or a pain in your side; it may make you nervous and irritable. You may be able to keep up and around, but you do not feel good. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for women. It is especially adapted to relieve the cause of these troubles, and restore them to normal health.
