CASE OF SMALLPOX.—Among the passengers from New Brunswick to the Island by the car-ferry steamer on Friday was a man named McMahon who developed symptoms of smallpox on the trip. The attention of the conductor of the train at Borden was drawn to the case and Dr. McNeill of Summerside was telephoned for, and upon his arrival pronounced the case to be one of smallpox of a mild type. The patient who was coming to Charlottetown, was transferred to a box car which was provided with a cot and a stove and this car was left standing on a siding until Saturday morning when it was brought to Charlottetown. The patient was later transferred to the Quarantine Hospital at Keppoch.

A REGRETTABLE ACCIDENT.—A very regrettable accident occurred in this city Saturday night as the result of which the fifteen year old daughter of Mr. Benjamin Binns, Chauffeur for Mr. Ivan Reddin lies in a critical condition. Mr. Reddin's car is badly smashed and an electric light post was snapped off near the base. It appears that Mr. Binns who was on his way out to Mr. Reddin's house with the car, overtook his wife and his little boy and girl on the way home and took them in. As they were turning from Rochford Street to Brighton Road, Mr. Binns slowed up, but it seems that his foot slipped against the accelerator, causing the car to unexpectedly speed up with the result that he could not avoid crashing into the electric light pole. The impact threw the three occupants from the car, the little girl being dashed through the glass wind shield, being badly cut and bruised. The others miraculously escaped with minor injuries. Mr. Binns had his nose hurt, Mrs. Binns' shoulder was injured and the boy's arm hurt, to some extent. The light post was severed and only hung together by the broken wood and the wires; and yesterday morning was removed. The front of Mr. Reddin's car, a King, was badly damaged, the wind shield broken and bent and one of the lights was smashed. The injured girl was carried into Mr. Geoffrey Fitzcarrald's house near by where first aid treatment was administered until the arrival of a physician. Last evening she was resting easy and considerably improved.

TANK CORPS

MONTREAL, May 4.—One of the speediest examples of volunteer recruiting reported in Montreal for many months has been the organization of the two tank corps for McGill and Laval Universities. Although the two corps were only authorized a little over two weeks ago, the Laval Corps is already complete and is now in Ottawa, while the McGill Corps is now complete and will leave for Ottawa shortly. The two corps have been enlisted from men of the Canadian Officers Training Corps and include many McGill and Laval men as well as non-university members of the Canadian Officers Training Corps. The two corps could easily have taken on many more men, but the recruiting officers had to stop when the number allotted to their units was reached. The McGill unit of the tank battalion consists of 186 officers and men, with an unusually large percentage of officers, owing to the nature of the service. A smaller unit was allotted to Laval University, C. O. T. C., comprising 67 officers and men.

How Britain Met Liquor Problem

LONDON, April 30.—The great difficulty with which England is confronted in obtaining a sufficient supply of food for its population has brought up again the question of the use of alcoholic liquors. In spite of the fact that beer, whiskey, or wines are drunk by practically every class in England, the prohibition element has taken advantage of the opportunity to repeat its demands that the country should go dry.
In a debate in the House of Commons recently these demands were pressed, but the government was firm in its opposition. It declared that if the time ever came when there was a real choice between providing grain for beer and grain for bread, it would have no hesitation in declaring for bread, but it held that things had not yet reached so serious a condition and that it was not in favor of imposing further restrictions at this time.
It was admitted that three per cent of the total food supply now consumed in Great Britain is used for brewing beer, of which perhaps one per cent is returned, after the brewing process, to be used as animal food, and it is the deliberate judgment of the responsible officials that, after taking all the factors into consideration, no better use can be made of this three per cent, at the present time.
This means that the British government has considered the consumption of alcohol as something more than a drink question. It has realized that it affects nearly every aspect of the life of the nation and that meddling with it will result in all sorts of unexpected effects. It is expressing no opinion whatever on the right or wisdom of the drinking habits of the people—it is merely trying to modify them so as to make the nation more efficient in the war.

British Workman Wants His Beer

To take only one factor in the problem, the British workman lives in beer and always has been used to drinking beer. It may be quite true that if he were told by the government that the national straits were such that he could have no more beer, he would shrug his shoulders and take tea, but as things have not yet come to this stage, he still wants his beer. For nearly four years now he has been working extremely hard under depressing circumstances, and the government feels that he is entitled to his usual pint.
So in the Commons debate J. R. Clynes, Parliamentary Secretary of the Food Ministry and in private life Secretary of the Lancashire District Gas-workers and General Laborers' Union, thus expressed the needs of the workingman:
"But, think what they are doing. They began work earlier, they are laboring longer hours, they are working harder, they are doing heavier industrial service than ever before, and the real question is, ought we to ask them to submit to further deprivation than the war conditions have imposed upon them?"
These conditions already are severe, and have had a very marked effect in reducing the amount of drinking all over Great Britain. They were drawn up by a body known as the Central Control Board (Liquor Traffic), of which Lord D'Abernon is chairman and which set itself not to stamp out the use of alcoholic liquors, but to study the social customs of the people and devise methods by which men should get a reasonable amount of beer and whiskey if they wanted to, but should be discouraged from drinking to excess.

Fewer Convictions for Drunkenness

How greatly the Central Control Board has succeeded is shown by a few figures. In the Metropolitan Police District of London, covering 700 square miles and a population of 7,500,000, the convictions for drunkenness in 1913 were 6,617; in 1914, 67,103; and in 1917 only 16,567. In England and Wales the deaths from alcoholism excluding cirrhosis of the liver, were, in 1913, 1,831; in 1914, 1,816; in 1915, 1,822; and the deaths from cir-

King Visits And Commends Salvation Army

LONDON (By Mail).—In the course of a round of visits which he made at the London Command Depot, on a recent Tuesday morning, His Majesty the King called at The Salvation Army Hut which is conducted by Commandant and Mrs. T. Cox in the camp. There was a numerous company of soldiers in the Hut at the time though the Commandant was ill, and Mrs. Cox was bravely "carrying on" a fact which did not escape His Majesty's commendation.
Shaking hands with Mrs. Cox, the King asked a number of questions regarding the efforts which The Salvation Army is making for the welfare of the troops, and expressed himself as well pleased with the comfort and interior arrangements of the Hut. He was also delighted to note the popularity of the Institution, as evidenced by the attendance of soldiers present.
Just before leaving London for a recent provincial campaign, The General received the following letter from Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig:
The generous tribute will be read with intense satisfaction by Salvationists the world over.
"General Headquarters, British Armies in France, March 27, 1918.
I am glad to have the opportunity of congratulating the Salvation Army on the service which its representatives have rendered during the past year to the British Armies in France.
"The Salvation Army workers have shown themselves to be of the right sort, and I value their presence here as being one of the best influences on the moral and spiritual welfare of the troops at the bases. The inestimable value of these influences is realized

THE CHURCH OF GOLD

There is no structure just like St. Mark's, in Venice, in the world. Its high shaped domes and minaret-like bell-towers remind the visitor of the Orient. It seems more like a Mohammedan than a Christian temple. In the facade are scores of variously colored marble columns, each one a monolith and all possessing an eventful history. Some are from Ephesus, others from Smyrna, others from Constantinople and more than one from Jerusalem. St. Mark's is the treasure-house of Venice, a place of pride as well as prayer. The work of beautifying this old church was carried on for five centuries, and each generation tried to outdo all that had preceded it. The walls and roof are so profusely covered with mosaics and precious marbles that it is easy to understand why St. Mark's has been called the "Church of Gold."

A COSTLY VOCATION.

Quantin Roseveall at a living school in France, talked about his father's farming experience.
"Father," he said, "was a farmer for many years. Now he'd have a ranch. Now he'd have a plantation. The experience was costly.
"Father," I said to him one day in my childhood, "what is a 'gentle man' farmer?"
"Quantin," said my father, "a 'gentleman' farmer is a chap who never raises anything except his hat."
