Lawrence Tibbett In "Under Your Spell" At Prince Edward

With Lawrence Tibbett as a fed-up singing star and Wendy Barrie as a hot-headed heiress after his aria supplying riotous romance, Gregory Ratoff and Arthur Treacher collaborating on riotous comedy, "Under Your Spell," the Twentieth Century-Fox newest tune triumph opens today at the Prince Edward Theatre.

vate parties, she will marry him (the Count), arrives on the scene and causes pandemonium on the plains. It's love at first sight and romance on the run as Wendy pursues another as Tibbett returns to return with her in her plane. She finally wins her point and they are about to fly East, when the ever-active Ratoff works a false publicity "gag" that shows her up as a love-sick silly, chasing a celebrity. Wendy is so mad and disgusted at what she believes to be Tibbett's trickery that she decides to go back and marry the Count just for spite.

The Lieut.-Governor will receive on New Year's Day at Government House from three to five-thirty P.M.

REVIEW OF LIVE STOCK MARKETING

(BY J. A. GILLIES, Secretary Livestock Marketing Board) A review of the live stock situation during the year 1936 is a rather interesting study, and although it is difficult to include complete detail from week to week or from month to month, in this resume, yet it may be within our reach to give a general review for the year that will be interesting, and possibly profitable, to those who may be inclined to make use of the thoughts and ideas to which we give expression.

To Prince Edward Island farmers, perhaps hog production and marketing is the most important phase of mixed live stock husbandry and to this we first give attention. At the close of 1935, and entering upon the present year, profitable returns were being received for hogs, the demand was good, prices were firm and generally prevailing conditions indicated a favorable gambling chance for the farmer inclined to produce. This was especially so as applying to the first half of the year, and mainly for two reasons—the comparatively low cost of feed, and the possible shortage in supplies from Western Canada. As the year progressed this analysis of the situation seemed to be well-founded, and hog producers, particularly in Eastern Canada, were fairly well rewarded for their practical demonstration of faith in the swine industry. Prices were maintained at profitable levels and throughout the period satisfaction appeared to prevail.

The experience of the first part of the year may almost be repeated as being applicable to the last six months excepting that, early in this period, a sharp advance in feed prices took place and thus adversely affected the ultimate profit in hog growing. The increase in production in Western Canada was not sufficient to affect the markets in the east to any extent, and the slightly lower average price prevailing as compared with last year was due to causes other than that supposed earlier in the season to be a factor. The British market for bacon, generally, has a bearing on the price of Canadian hog production, but does not definitely determine. Bacon prices in England were higher as a rule throughout the latter part of the season than during a corresponding period last year, yet hog prices in Canada were a bit lower. The higher cost of feed seems to have acted as an urge to overland the domestic markets with a light and underfinished run of hog. The percentage of the weekly offerings, suitable for export, was not sufficiently large to afford relief and consequently prices fluctuated at lower than necessary levels. The producer is the only one who can apply a remedy in such a situation, and should realize that it is inadvisable to offer underweight and underfinished hogs to the trade. Production has increased very considerably during the year with the result that the "hog money" has been a tremendous factor in leaving the various economic crises that have a habit of overtaking the average agriculturist.

Cattle Cattle prices throughout the season did not seem to respond to improving conditions in Canada, nor keep pace with that offered for hogs, lambs, poultry, etc., whatever may have been the reason. There was a brief period early in the year when export to the United States seemed to have an effect, and higher prices became the order of the day. This was rather short lived, as heavy commitments of poorer quality was thrown upon what was proving to be a good outlet, with the inevitable result. The new market refused to absorb the offering, and the overflow was thrown upon a crowded domestic market with the usual disappointing result. Prices dropped, and ever since it has been difficult to apply a restorative strong enough to have a very enervating effect. The cattle market on the whole has not been good. This province has enjoyed a market equal to most any part of Canada throughout the season, but it can be improved still further, by bettering the quality and adjusting marketing methods.

Edward Everett Horton At The Capitol

A new, more dynamic, more colorful Edward Everett Horton makes his appearance in Universal's trigger-quick action comedy, "His Night Out," which opens today at the Capitol Theatre. Horton, was the whole show, and he made the hour and a quarter this reviewer spent seeing the production interesting, entertaining and hilarious. Beautiful Irene Hervey, scored as Horton's foil in the delightful comedy. Others in the cast included Robert McWade, playing excellently one of his "crabby" roles; Jack LaRue as a sinister gangster who allowed a sense of humor to creep into his work now and then; Lola Lane, as his sweetheart; Willard Robertson as the kindly business man interested in the happiness of Miss Hervey and Oscar Apfel, as a "quack" physician. Noticed also were those splendid troupers of the silent days, Clara Kimball Young, Jack Mulhall and Frank Mayo. The story opens with Horton taking pills. He is suffering the delusion that he is ill and when a "phony" physician tells him he is about to die—can last only three months at the outside—his whole attitude toward life changes. He goes spendthrift.
