SATURDAY, SEPT. 18th

BRIGHTEN THEIR TOMORROW

More than fourteen thousand Canadian citizens live and work and find what happiness they can in a world of drab and unending darkness. They cannot see.

The Canadian National Institute for the Blind affords every person of compassion the opportunity to help those without sight to help themselves.

YOUR generosity will yield rich dividends—to the blind and to yourself.

FATS AND SMOKING

LONDON — (CP) — If the food ministry would supply more fats the demand for cigarettes might drop to pre-war proportions, a doctor believes. "Reduction of fats from 75 grams to under 40 grams per day means that everyone feels hungrier sooner. Smoking often relieves this sensation," he said.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

THE SHADOW THAT STRUCK

When there seems least cause for fear Danger may be lurking near. —Peter Rabbit.

Often when danger seems farthest away it is nearest. So the time to be most watchful is the time when there seems the least need of it. The older ones among the smaller Green Forest folk know this and do not forget it. As time goes they may seem to be it unexpected danger appears suddenly you will find that they are prepared for it. They know exactly where the nearest hiding-place is and the shortest way there. It is because they do remember and are prepared that they have lived to become the older ones.

In a moonlit glade in the Green Forest there was fun and frolic. It is a lively place, that little glade. Tummy the Plying Squirrel crossed and recrossed it in the air, sliding down the moonbeams or pretending to. Whitefoot the Wood Mouse was drumming with his dainty white feet that he somehow manages to keep dainty and white at all times. Several of his friends were there, darting about or drumming too. They are sometimes called Deer Mice, it isn't because they have anything to do with the Deer folk but because their trim, close-fitting coats are very like in color to the summer coats of the Deer folk, especially the coats of the fawns. Of course Mrs. Whitefoot was there.

And out there in the moonlight, hopping skipping, jumping, cutting up capers, were the Hare folk. Jumper, Mrs. Jumper, the young Jumpers and several of their friends. There was no dignity even among the oldest. Moonlight and dignity do not go together; they do not mix. Some show, dignity seems not to know how to have a good time. It cannot kick up its heels. Anyway, it never has a lively good time, and moonlight is for good times. So

Contract Bridge

A Fatal Miscalculation

Today's declarer made an excellent start in the play of his redoubled contract, but he then miscalculated and spoiled his good work.

North dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

One bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♠	Pass	1♠	Pass
2♠	Pass	2NT	Pass
3♠	Pass	3NT	Pass
Pass	Double	Pass	Pass
Redbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Despite his stoppers in three suits, East should not have doubled the three-no-trump contract reached via such strong bidding. (North had "reversed," which in itself shows a very strong hand.)

West sensed his partner's wishes by opening a heart. Dummy's nine was put in to cover West's eight; East won with the ten and returned the heart queen. The king won, and now declarer took stock. He saw that if he tried to run diamonds and found East with a stopper, as his double indicated, the contract would be in great jeopardy; therefore, declarer cashed dummy's club ace and led a spade, his idea being to try for two spade tricks in his own hand, plus at least the club king. East, on winning with the spade king, could not afford to lead another heart because he would be playing from the J-5 into dummy's A-8. So East exited with a club.

If declarer had considered the situation carefully he would have seen that while he could afford to lose a club trick, he could not afford to lose it right now, and certainly not to West, who might have another heart to lead through dummy. Thus, the club king was a vital play at this point, but declarer finessed and that was his finish. West won and led another heart, which gave the defenders five sure tricks.
