AN IMPERIAL POET.

As has before been stated in these columns, all Japanese are poets, and it is said the Emperor Mutsohito has within the past ten years written over thirty thousand odes in the thirty-one syllables style known as tanka, peculiar to Japanese poetry. Each New Year's day it is a custom to write an ode. A theme is set and the Emperor, the Empress and all the exalted personage of the court compete, each composing a tanka. The nation then joins in the competition and thousands of odes are sent in, most of them involving a delicate compliment to the ruler.

The Emperor, the Godhead of the Shinto priests and illustrious descendant of the Sun God, writes a tanka every day and is venerated by his people as a great poet as well as a deity whose supreme virtue brings blessing and victory to the nation Japanese poetry has neither rhyme nor rhythm and its delicate imagery is very difficult of reproduction in English yet some translations of the imperial poems tend to throw much light upon the character, temper and modes of thought of the present Japanese ruler and the ties that bind him and his people together. Here is one, militant but unrevengeful and embodying the Christian injunction, "love your enemies":—

"The foe that strikes thee,
For thy country's sake,
Strike him with all thy might,
But while thou strikest
Forget not still to love him."

And here is another beautifully expressing the relations between the Emperor and his people:—

"Green is the constant pine
And green the constant troth
That binds the rulers and the ruled,
Making one of both."

This tenderly sets forth His Imperial Majesty's solicitude for his soldiers in the field during the mosquito season:—

Importunate mosquitoes, light of wing,
With trivial song and sting disturb my rest
This sleepless night—
On what dark lonesome fields
'Midst what great hardships lie my soldiers brave!

The Empress, too, has a thought for her poorer subjects in the rigor of the winter season, expressed as follows:—

The winter, with its rigors, touches not
Our bodies, clad in vestments warm and rich;
But when we think upon the shivering poor
That freeze in their thin rags, the cruel tooth
Of pitiless winter bites our inmost heart.

Will Japan and the United States become embroiled in war? That depends on several things. We regard such a war as possible, but highly improbable, and yet should it come Japan would apparently have little fear of the issue, having made good in the conflict with the military Colossus, Russia. In such case we can fancy the Emperor Poet putting forth the plea for divine approval of an unavoidable war as he did before the last great struggle. The working of the Eastern mind is a mystery to us; its sense of justice is very strong but not always in accord with ours. This was the Emperor's tanka at the outbreak of war with Russia:

"We've tried to be sincere in deed and word,
And have exhausted every means to state
A clear and truthful case; but all in vain.
Now may God, that sees the heart of men,
Approve of what we do."

TUNNEL TALK.

A recent visit to New Brunswick and a talk with a number of the people there surprised us with the advance of public sentiment in regard to the Tunnel. A few years ago the feeling there was that the project was somewhat visionary and the actual construction a far off if not an altogether improbable event. Today one meets many in St. John and along the line of railway who say "you must get the Tunnel." One does not need to argue the case now as formerly. His arguments are anticipated. They realize what a large annual outlay would be saved in the cost of the present altogether inadequate winter service, the wear and tear of winter boats, and the additional business and revenue it would bring to the Intercolonial and Island Railways. The feeling grows that not only the Island needs the Tunnel, but that New Brunswick wants it, Nova Scotia wants it, Ontario and Quebec want it for their growing business with the Island. It is gratifying to find public sentiment on the mainland thus sympathetic and confident. The feeling is apparently growing everywhere that the work must be undertaken and that it gives as much prospect of proving self-sustaining as any considerable public work yet built by the Dominion.

There are doctors and doctors. As a rule the profession stands high—a body of learned, skilful men, honestly, faithfully and successfully pursuing a great calling to prevent and cure as far as they may the ills that flesh is heir to. But there is an occasional black sheep in the white flock. Of one such a correspondent from an outlying county writes us—"saw him sitting in a drugstore writing certificates (to obtain liquor for alleged medical purposes) for all who would apply." Such a doctor can hardly be expected to realise his own degradation. Perhaps he may not give a thought as to how he must be regarded by the honorable members of the medical profession. Nothing would, so surely do him good as an application of the legal penalties provided for his offences. An example ought to be made of at least one of these "black sheep."
