—PECULIAR ACCIDENT.—A strange and also a painful accident is reported from Northam, Mr. Barrole of that place received a bruise on the hand which became irritated and showed evidence of incipient blood poisoning. He was advised to bandage his hand tightly above the wrist, which he did with binder twine. (It being the one available article at the time); he also bathed his hand copiously with turpentine after which operation he proceeded to light his pipe. The turpentine on his hands caught fire, and both hands were terribly burned. His suffering is intense. The binder twine had become saturated with turpentine, and the fire in it could not be smothered out, to make matters worse the latch of an outside kitchen door, where there was a bucket of water, went wrong, and the door had to be burst before he could immerse his hand, and get temporary relief.—K.
