ANNUAL MEETING BLOOD DONOR'S CLUB — The annual meeting of the Blood Donor's Club of the Charlottetown Hospital was held on Jan. 30 in the Nurses' Home. A large number of the members were present. The president, Mr. Leo Corcoran was in the chair. In the absence of Mr. Cecil Costello, Mr. Fred Egan acted as Secretary of the meeting Many topics relative to the functioning of the club were discussed and as this is the fifth anniversary of the club a resume of the work done in that time was presented to the members. The greatest progress the club has made is the organization of a modern Blood Bank where whole blood and plasma are stored and ready at anytime for patients The members were shown what an advantage a blood bank is to a hospital and realized that they are doing a great work in saving and healing suffering humanity on the home front. An election of officers then took place and the following were elected. President, Mr. Leo Corcoran, re-elected; Vice-President, Mr. Lucius Kelly; Secretary, Mr. Fred Egan; Committee, Mr. Leo Corcoran, Mr. Eugene Kelly and Mr Wilfred McKenna.

The Suprising Sanctuary

By Leslie Cargill

"Which of you is Mr. Mallow?" he inquired.

Ambrose Martin opened his mouth, closed it again and finally took it upon himself to answer. "You've got the name wrong, mister," he said.

"Isn't this Ovarn Island?"

"That right!"

"Well, I've a message for the warden."

Hugh Everard stepped forward. "That's me," he exclaimed.

"H'mph! Expected an older man Why did you hang back when I asked for Mr. Mallow?"

"Because it isn't my name. I'm Everard. This is Mr. Martin. Seems to be some mistake, as I am certainly in charge. It's rather foolish that I never asked who was here before but I dare say it was the Mallow you mentioned."

"In that case you'd best read the letter yourself."

"I can't very well open another person's correspondence, sir."

"Stuff and nonsense! This is the warden of the bird sanctuary. Evidently there's been a change since I had the introduction. We've been voyaging for weeks."

Tearing open the envelope, Hugh read the official permit for Mr. H. Pewsey Mason to explore the island at his pleasure. As a hermitage Ovarn was letting him down badly.

"I see it is dated three months ago," he remarked. "Doesn't that make a big difference?"

"Not a bit, young man. Your employers have given me carte blanche. Don't imagine we shall scare the birds, or be troublesome in any way. Carry on as usual and don't mind us."

"Nevertheless, Mr. Mason, I am dubious about allowing you to remain."

"There'll be a pretty fuss if you cut up rusty."

Everard found an unexpected supporter in Ambrose Martin, but the joint protestations were brushed aside.

"What's the rumpus about, Pop?" asked a cool feminine voice.

"Nothing serious my dear", Mr. Mason reported.

The girl in yachting costume stepped gracefully into the scene. "I take it we aren't very welcome," she said. "Treat 'em like you did old sourpuss up in the Shetlands."

"That will do, Muriel! These gentlemen have a right to examine our credentials."

"Right, did you say? Pewsey Mason's name should be a passport. Which of you is the Pooh Bah?"

"I am," Hugh acknowledged sourly.

"What, no beard? You must grow a long scraggy grey one to match your manners."

"Muriel, will you please be quiet!"

She took up a defiant stance and replied crisply. "Trouble with you, Pop, is velvet glove minus iron fist. And I still insist a beard would suit him. A scraggy and scruffy one."

"I'll manage this my way!"

"Go ahead, and make a mess of it."

Mason turned to Hugh. "No, sir" he said, assuming a pleasant smile, "my authority is unquestionable and you have no alternative other than tolerating our presence."

"I can throw you off the island".

"Try it!" Muriel broke in. "Oh, try it and take the consequences. You—you acolyte."

"Anchorite, my dear." Mr. Mason corrected.

"I can think of more appropriate words" she retorted. "Shall I call George?"

"Are there more of you?" Hugh asked

"You'll find out," she said darkly. "Now what are you going to do?"

"Nothing! It's late and I'm tired"

The sparring match was resumed next time they met. The previously unseen George had reinforced the Mason side, and George Jessop was so large, grim and capable that it was evident the party held the advantage.

In addition Muriel was a host in herself.

"A trifle wayward" apologized her father, "Comes of spending nearly every minute with me since her dear mother died. You must make allowances for her rudeness, Mr. Everard."

"It's no concern of mine" Hugh snapped. "Presumably I've no say in who tramples my cabbage patch. Leave me alone, that's all!"

Mr. Mason shook his head disapprovingly. Although not getting a cordial welcome he insisted on remaining. His reputation in nature study led him to look for congenial discussions, and it was disappointing to be met with open hospitality.

They decided to set up their tents on the seaward side of the island, putting as great a distance as possible between them and the gloomy young man. As this decision also necessitated carrying stores from the Elder Duck to the camp, across rough country, there was an irregular series of processions for several days, during which Hugh waxed increasingly angry.

"Might as well live in the middle of London," he complained. "First one thing and then another. Why couldn't they sail the darned boat round to the other side and unload, instead of traipsing up and down like—like—"

"Lost souls," Ambrose Martin suggested.

"Like peripatetic penguins" Hugh amended.

MR. and Mrs. ROBERT RHYNES, Dunstaffnage, who celebrated their Golden Wedding on Wednesday.

"I think it would have been better had they stayed this side."

"You do, do you? And whose island is this supposed to be, may I ask? Not the Mason's. Not yours".

Mr. Martin scratched his chin. "You're the boss," he conceded. "I know I've got on your G string, butting in as I did. But I can't face the row back. 'Twouldn't be right to expect me. Not at my age."

"We've gone all over all that" Hugh snapped.

"Perhaps the Masons will give me a lift if they clear out before the motor boat calls?"

"Seemingly, they're here till Doomesday." He had forgotten all about earlier suspicions of Martin's intentions. Fate had thrown them together and he could, at least, let off steam in the presence of a man who rarely retaliated.

Ever since the appearance of the Elder Duck, Ambrose Martin had been on his best behaviour. Thinking back, Hugh decided that he had mentally invented a peril on the evening on which the cabin cruiser's siren had jolted him back to realities.

Annual Meeting York United Church

The annual meeting of the Official Board of York United Church Pastorate was held at the Parsonage on Jan. 26. The pastor, Rev. J. A. Nicholson, presided and opened the meeting with prayer. Minutes of the last annual meeting were read and adopted. Financial reports from the churches of the charge were presented and showed that all allocations had been met and on motion it was agreed that the same allocations should be accepted for 1944.

It was agreed on motion that the sum of $350.00 be sent to the Missionary and Maintenance Fund. Mr. Lester Keizer was appointed Lay Representative to the Maritime Conference with R. L. Bryenton alternative.

All officers were re-elected for 1944:

Secretary, Walter MacMillan
Treasurer, Lester Keizer
Auditor, Harold Watts.

It was agreed on motion that the congregations of the different churches meet at the parsonage on Feb. 9 for a social evening. Agreed that financial statement for 1943 be handed to the Treasurer not later than Feb. 20.

A vote of appreciation for their splendid work on the charge during the past year was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson. A vote of thanks was also tendered the treasurer, Mr. Lester Keizer. It was decided that a report of the meeting be handed to the press.

Next meeting of the Board will be held at Central Church, on May 3.

On motion meeting adjourned and closed with benediction by the pastor.

BRACKLEY POINT NOTES

A pleasant evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shaw on Tuesday evening, January 25th, when a number of neighbours and relatives were invited to celebrate with them the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. A well-worded address was read by Mrs. Colin McLure and Mr. Cleve Robinson presented Mrs. Shaw with a beautiful hand-bag and Mr. Shaw with a set of pipes and tobacco pouch. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw expressed their thanks to those assembled for their kind remembrance. Hearty congratulations were extended and an enjoyable evening spent in games and music.

The Women's Missionary Society held two meetings in the month of January, the December meeting being held on January 5th at the home of Mrs. Colin McLure, the January meeting on the 27th at the home of Mrs. Hamilton Shaw. Both meetings were largel yattended.

The regular monthly meeting of the Red Cross Unit was held in the 20th at the home of Mrs. George Shaw with a full attendance of members. The program consisted of a sing-song and two interesting contests. Collection was $3.71. Fifteen dollars was voted for Queens Canadian Fund. Several finished articles were handed in including a quilt, also two more to be quilted for next meeting. It was decided to hold card parties during the winter months to help raise funds for the Red Cross.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles McKenzie, Milton, have returned after a pleasant visit with their daughter Mrs. Walter McLure, Brackley Point.

The sympathy of the community is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ratray and family in the death of their son Wilbur which occurred in the Montreal Hospital after a short illness.

Mrs. George Shaw, Stanhope, is visiting friends in Brackley Point.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear wife and mother, Mrs. John L. Mill who passed away February 4, 1934.

MILL—Other hearts may have their sorrows
Griefs that quickly die away
But a Mother taken from us
Grieves the heart from day to day.
We miss her hand, her willing hand
Her fond and earnest care;
And oh, how dark is life around us
What is home without her there.

Youth Training Courses Under Way

The Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Mr. W. R. Shaw, who is also director of Youth Training in the Province, informs The Guardian that five separate courses are being conducted in the city at the present time. These are farm mechanics, carpentry, blacksmithing, egg grading and household science. In addition, training is given under the Federal-Provincial Youth Training plan for students attending Prince of Wales College and taking teacher training, and also for medical students entered on their university courses. An evening class is also held in Mechanics for girls in the Motor Transport Section of the Red Cross Corps. A total of 97 students are engaged in all these courses.

The blacksmith course is designed to give a training in ordinary blacksmithing work, building of sleighs and mounting of same, the construction of wagons with boxes and a varied training in a craft that would suit farm localities. This course is of five months duration.

The carpentry course is also designed as a practical course, suitable to farm communities and covers a wide range, including the uses of tools, in the field of farm construction. In the mechanics course an attempt is made to cover the operation of motors, both stationary and otherwise and a thorough insight into the operation of tractors, cars and other equipment is given. In addition, an excellent training has been provided in the repair and making of harness and much interest has been evidenced in this development by the students attending the class.

The egg grading course is being conducted at Prince of Wales College and in practically every case the students attending this course who qualify, are assured of employment in grading stations, or stores through the Province, as soon as they have completed the course. Most of the students on this course are girls.

The household science course, over which Miss Jane MacKenzie of Flat River has direction, provides a fine training in household operation and in various lines, including dressmaking and remodelling of garments. The question of nutrition also comes in for attention, while home nursing and first aid receive very careful consideration.

Two nights a week are devoted in the mechanics school for girls from the Red Cross. An excellent opportunity is afforded these young women, who understand what to do in case of emergency in the operation of motor vehicles.

Under the Student Aid schedule two medical students have availed themselves of the provisions of the policy while 6 students are taking the teacher training course.

The courses, Mr. Shaw states, should prove of great benefit in fitting young people for useful and permanent employment throughout the province.
