THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS
 By Homer Croy

 Underneath these pictures were the mottoes with glass covering and framed in passe-partout—epigrams and success sayings which had him. One was:

THEY SAID IT COULDN'T BE DONE; HE DID IT

Another was one that he himself had written. He had taken it to the printer and had it set up, with each capital letter in red:

The Man who gets Discouraged has no Crow; even a Chicken has that.

There was a chorus of voices as Pike entered and the usual jesting; then they grew silent and the men glanced from one to another. Ed Egger was to be the speaker.

Ed Egger, prosperous and a few years younger than Pike, was the owner of the Ponca Lumber Company. He not only sold lumber in Clearwater, but also followed the oil and sold to the rig builders when there was a strike. His mind dwelt on two subjects—business and women—and the ease and facility with which he could turn from one to the other was amazing. He had great success with both.

"Say, old timer," he began, "we've been thinking it over and we've decided you're keeping your nose too close to the grindstone. You've got to take it off. Fact is, Pike, we're getting up a little 'scouting party' to go down to Dallas. Word has just come in that there's some good picking."

On the surface "scouting party" was supposed to mean that the men were going out to look for oil leases, either to buy or to sell, for all the men in this section owned oil leases and traded in them continually. Dallas was the headquarters and here one could get the latest tips and general trade gossip. But as a matter of fact it was not this at all. It meant adventures with wmeon. It was the practice for a certain little group in Clearwater to go on such expeditions at least once a year. Sometimes the men went together, and sometimes they departed singly and met later. Sometimes they met under the guise of a fishing trip, or a business trip, but for this one purpose. But the word never got out; the little club was water-tight. A deep feeling of loyalty held the men together; nothing in the world would have induced them to tell on the others and they res'ed secure in this knowledge.

"We'll dig out of here so as to get down there 'for Saturday night. Then we'll look the leases over."
 The men laughed.
 "We want you to go with us, Pike," one of them added.
 Pike had never gone on such a party. In fact, Pike had never had such an adventurer in his life. He was one of the few men in this wild, growing, unexpressed state who had come to marriage untouched. It was in no way connected with religion, for Pike was without religion in the commonly accepted sense. It might have come from the great respect in which he held his mother, remembering the bitter struggle she had, only to die in his arms, or it might have been from the deep, abiding affection he had for his wife, or it might have come from some chance word in his formative years. But in other things Pike had no hesitation. He was a born gambler, as the saying goes, and the best poker-player in Clearwater. On his business trips to Detroit one of his pleasures was to go into the smoking-car and to pretend that he was from the country just learning the ways of the busy world, and get into a poker game with up-and-coming drummers. He liked the excitement of it—and what he took away from the stunned gentlemen.

 All his life he had sworn; he had learned it in his early days among the hardy pioneers of the Strip and had developed it along talented lines of his own until it had reached something near perfection. When he was forty-seven or eight he fell ill—the first time in his life—and had gone to bed for three days. He had not sworn since. His strongest exclamation now was one of his own coining, "Hell's huckleberry"—all that was left of a once brilliant art.
 "Come on in; the water's fine," said one of the men.
 "Sorry, men, but I can't get off. I've got a new car unloading Saturday and I've got to be here. You know how it is," he appealed.
 The men urged, but Pike remained firm. Bet and gamble, and now and then stretch the truth and occasionally practice sharp business deals, these men valued he had, but at the other he hated. Some deep principle of his was at stake; nothing could induce him to violate it.
 The men went away and Pike turned to his work. Some time later a deep weird, haunting sound suddenly burst forth, seeming to rush into the very bones of one's being. It was the fire siren. But instead of giving a number of short shrieks to indicate which section of town the fire was in, it rose and fell in one long continuous howl. Pike went to the door; already people were piling into the street, running and waving their hands, and a medley of cars dashed by. It meant that definite word had been telephoned in that the wells on the Maginnis tract were to be brought in and at once. An excited man panted up to Pike—did Pike have any more cars?
 "Sure," said Pike, good-naturedly "all you want—but they're between here and Detroit." The man dashed on. "Danged fools," thought Pike. "If they knew anything about oil, they wouldn't get so excited." And then he went back to his work.
 A car drew up outside; in it were Mrs. Peters and Opal.
 "Come on, let's go," said Mrs. Peters. "Everybody else is."
 In a few minutes they were on their way.

What About the Feathers On the Turkey?

$50.00 to the Person who counts them correctly—Other awards from $20.00 down

The feathers on the Turkey are made up of figures 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. The problem is to take these feathers off the Turkey and add the figures. The total of the added figures will be taken as the number of feathers on the bird.

PRIZES—For the correct, or nearest correct, solution prizes in order as follows will be paid in cash.
 1st Prize ..... $50.00
 2nd Prize ..... 20.00
 3rd Prize ..... 10.00
 4th Prize ..... 5.00
 5th Prize ..... $4.00
 6th Prize ..... 3.00
 7th Prize ..... 2.00
 8th Prize ..... 1.00

Conditions

- 1 Every one in any family where there is a regular subscription of this paper paid in advance, is invited to try the solution and compete for the prizes.
- 2 Anyone not eligible in accordance with No. 1 condition, may compete by becoming a subscriber or sending in the subscription of some member of the family with $4.00 for country or $5.00 for the city for the first year in advance.
- 3 Every competitor may, if he or she so desires, send in a new paid in advance for one year subscription with the solution. This is not obligatory; but the winner of each prize who does send a new subscriber will be awarded double the amount his or her prize calls for. Thus, if the winner of the first prize had sent a new subscriber, he will be awarded $100.00 cash instead of $50.00, and accordingly with all the prizes. No one can so secure double money unless the new subscription is actually forwarded with his solution.
- 4 Each competitor, by sending in his solution, agrees that the decision of the judges shall be indisputable and final.
- 5 All solutions must be sent in on the following form, clipped from this paper.

IT COSTS NOTHING
 There is absolutely no responsibility, obligation or cost of any kind to try for a prize. The solving of the problem will provide a few hours most interesting work.

COMPETITION CLOSURES
 The competition closes Saturday, January 25, 1930, at midnight. All solutions to be considered, must reach the address below before that hour.

In case of a tie the prize will go to the one who had sent a new subscription with his solution in accordance with condition No. 3.

If those who tie have both, or all sent in new subscriptions; then the prize will go to the one whose subscription on which he or she became eligible, is paid the farthest in advance into the year 1930. If both or all are paid in advance to December 31, 1930, then the money will be divided among such proportionately according to the number of winners.

Cut this out on the border lines, fill in and mail early. Mark on outside of envelope "Turkey Feathers Competition."
