Soldiers' Memorials

ends they could not see, but in their great and undying faith they went to their death knowing that their sacrifice would not prove vain. There is, said, Mr. Fulton, something in man that is beyond the reach of death, and it is because these brave men realised this that they laid down their lives with willing hearts. The preacher went on to speak of the Unconquered Living, to whom was left the great task of perpetuating the ideals for which their fallen comrades had died. Those whom had been fortunate enough to return to their loved ones must make of Canada a place that would be eminently worthy of the high traditions of the great ancestry they were proud to claim, and to do this they must combat with a strong determination the evil influences which extremists and agitators sought to exercise on the national life of the country. The sermon was a splendid one, and at its close the unveiling ceremony took place. Lieut.-Colonel Prowse gave a short address in which he conveyed to the congregation of the Methodist Church the profound gratitude of the boys for all the kindnesses which had been shown them during their trying service overseas. There had been times, he said, when, owing to a comparatively comfortable and happy situation, the messages of cheer and the gifts from home, while highly appreciated, did not serve any great want. But the greater part of the time the circumstances of the men were exceedingly trying and in such circumstances the reminders from the congregation of the Church—the tokens of sympathy from home—proved an immense boon and blessing. On top of their kindness and thoughtfulness during the war, the congregation had now deemed it fit to honour the men by the erection of this tabiet, and Colonel Prowse, on behalf of the men, conveyed heartfelt gratitude for this magnificent tribute. He trusted that the people would receive that spiritual reward to which he was sure they were richly entitled.

The names on the tablet were read aloud by Major McKinnon, and the following officers took part in the unveiling:

Lieut. J. Rowland Paton, M.C. Lieut. Ernest Weeks, M.C. and Bar, M.M. and Bar. Sergt. Bruce Wonnacott, Sergt. R. S. Huestis, Sergt. Percy Hurdis Gregory, Sergt. Major M. A. Nicholson, Sergt. George W. Gardiner, Pte. Herbert King, Pte. Frank Puncher.

The service concluded with the singing of the National Anthem and the benediction.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH

In St. James' Presbyterian Church in the evening a solemn and deeply impressive service marked the dedication of the Memorial Pulpit, in which is inserted the bronze tablet in memory of the men of the Congregation who fell in the war. Long before the service began the Church was crowded, and when the pastor, Rev. Dr. Fullerton, rose to deliver his sermon, not only was every seat taken, but all the available space outside the doors was occupied. The service was a memorable one, and the unveiling of the Memorial was preceded by a magnificent choral programme and a sermon that was characteristic of the reverend pastor,—eloquent, inspiring and beautiful in expression. The choir was directed by Mrs. Keith Rogers, who presided very creditably at the organ; and Mr. Malcom contributed a splendid solo by Sullivan, "The Lord is Risen." The unveiling of the Tablet was carried out by Col. R. H. Campbell, and Col. Stewart.

Bugler T. Smith sounded the last post.

Dr. Fullerton's subject was "The Glorious Triumph," and he preached from Matthew 24, 13: "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." A short time ago, he said, one who was brought up in a banking institution and who went through the war was asked to address a meeting of bankers. He was asked the question whether he had ever seen so many bankers assembled together before, and he replied that he had had the honour of having been associated with more than one thousand bankers in a regiment, and had the greater honour of seeing every man go over the top in the fight for freedom, for righteousness and for permanent peace. Some did not return but had realized what the conflict meant and had been prepared to make the supreme sacrifice for the sake of the things they held dear. The Doctor said that those who remained at home had been able to keep the home fires burning only because those who fought and those who laid down their lives, had made of themselves a living wall of flesh between them and the foe. The men who fought on the battlefields of France and Flanders had endured the hardships of war in order that those whom they left at home might not suffer the degradation suffered by others.

The plan of God was to make us worthy disciples of Christ through trial and sacrifice. Jesus Christ, when he uttered the text of this sermon, saw in the foreground the persecution of those whom he was training to hold aloft the torch of Truth; he saw the destruction of Jerusalem and the martyrdom of the faithful; and in the face of these things he made the great declaration: "He that shall endure to the end, the same shall be saved." He points out to the disciples in every age that the way to heaven is the way of the Cross; that without the shedding of blood there can be no remission; and he calls upon his followers in every age to make the needed sacrifice that the Kingdom of God may come and be securely established on earth. They are to face trial and to brave danger, and shall know what suffering means and he also says that they shall reap the reward of their suffering: Victory will be theirs if they have an enduring and watchful love. It had been said that the religion of Jesus Christ tended to make men effeminate and to weaken the fibre and being of manhood. But, said the preacher, there was nothing in God's wide universe that bred heroes so strongly as the religion of Christ. It was in that religion that there was created the heroic temper that could endure and suffer patiently The text was the inspiration and call of the early Christians, who had to count the cost and pay the price. It meant the yielding of homes, friends, wealth and worldly honours. They were to take Christ and His Cross as the highest inspiration and example and to do that two thousand years ago meant death and even worse. We have renewed the call again and again in the unfolding of the purpose of God, and in the march of civilization and the advance of the Christian Church, and had to do it when the war broke out a few years ago; and many had shown that they had the power of endurance to the end. The man who will not face Gethsemane and loneliness cannot be a hero in the eyes of God. In the enduringness of the text we have the secret of a deep and true eminence. Enduring to the end is the quality we demand in those who are dearest to us. It is fidelity and tenacity of purpose that we seek pre-eminently in husband, wife, brother, lover. And why? Because it is the quality set forth by Jesus Christ. Only he who is prepared to endure to the end can be saved; only he who is prepared to lose his life can hold it; and not lightly can we gain the crown of Christ. To catch the spirt of the Master we must travel by the royal road of uncompromising zeal, courage and faithfulness. The salvation referred to here is not found in wealth, birth or chance distinction. It is the true metal beaten hard and jewelled as for state, with an eternal brightness. The most sublime illustration of the text is to be found in the life of Jesus Christ Himself, who showed us that in the way of the Cross we can conquer. He put his theory to the test and proved it on Calvary's cross amid ribald mockery and savage hatred; and today the most honoured name is the name of Jesus Christ. Today the source of the greatest comfort is found in the triumph of Him who went the way of the Cross to sit at the right hand of God But for Christ, said the preacher, this war would never have been fought, and victory never have been won; for our colossal foe would have been allowed to put his iron heel on the neck of humanity. At the outbreak of the war our men were free to go or to stay as they chose, well knowing what they were doing.

In the exercise of that manhood which is the one immortal thing beneath Time's changing sky, they made their choice. They went over the top to the music of the cannon's roar and the shrieking of bursting shell, and those whom we mourn, got their last long leave of absence. They stood at attention when the last post was sounded and they fell in freedom's cause; but they fell into the hands of a loving God. They had their faults, it is true; but, said Doctor Fullerton, we know quite well that war sobered them, and we believe today that every man who died in France and Flanders for the sake of the freedom of the world is a redeemer of the race. We believe it, he said, because we believe in the Cross of Christ. Our dead do not ask for our sympathy; they do not need our tears. They died the noblest death that can come to man. They died for the very ideals for whirh the Christ died on the cross; and Dr. Fullerton said he felt proud that so much honor was being paid that day in the city to the fallen heroes. He had no hesitation in saying that they too were taking delight in the services that were being held in the city. They want to be remembered, but they want us to do something as they themselves have done, for the re-dedication of life to the service of God, for the reconstruction of life in Canada that will make for that righteousness that alone can exalt us in the sight of God. Our fallen dead call us to be faithful even unto death,—to be candid, consistent, resolute, strong and temperate. Are we prepared to obey their summons and show that we are worthy of the great price they have paid for our freedom, for our protection, and for our very lives? They endured to the end. They would not compromise; they are saved; they are with the redeemed

Colonel Campbell then handed over the pulpit to the congregation to be dedicated to the men who had made the supreme sacrifice. He said he did so on behalf of the committee who had had charge of the work of selecting an appropriate memorial and who had just completed their labour of love. The Committee felt that they had made a wise choice and that the memorial which they had selected was a fitting tribute to the men who had died in the cause that was ours as well as theirs. The memorial was a beautiful one, appropriate to the building in which it would stand, and singularly appropriate as a tribute to those whom the congregation would always hold in fond and loving memory. It was eminenty fitting that the congregation should unite, as it was doing, in taking steps to make it tolerably certain that the names and lives and heroic death of the men whom they were honouring should be perpetuated in their remembrance. We, he said, are still too close to the great conflict to realize its true proportions; but our children and their children will see the full significance of the war and will realize as we cannot the enormity of the sacrifce which our brave sons have made for us. Many of the names on the tablet, said the Colonel, were the names of boys with whom he had been associated as friend and counsellor. He had had occasion to praise and scold them, and having been intimately connected with them in their youth he could say that their lives had been splendid. They had grown into sterling men who were a credit to the country, and when the call came responded promptly and willingly, endured hardship uncomplainingly, faced danger unflinchingly, and looked death in the face without dismay; and at the cost of their lives they gave us victory. We must take care that our children shall never forget that it is to these brave men that we owe the freedom we now enjoyed.

Lt-Colonel Stewart, in a brief but appropriate address, then handed the pulpit over to Dr. Fullerton. He said that some five hundred of the men of the province had fallen. The province was poorer in sons, but richer to the extent of five hundred heroes, and it was our duty to perpetuate their memory and the glorious record they had made for themselves.

Dr. Fullerton, in a few touhing remarks, paid fitting tribute to the memory of the fallen and extended sympathy to those whose wounds were re-opened by this necessary service. He was sure that their tears were not those of vain regret and that realizing the noble and magnificent part their dead had played in the freedom which had been won, they would rejoice in the sacrifice they had made

With the singing of the National Anthem and the playing of the Dead March the service then concluded.

ST. JAMES SUNDAY SCHOOL MEMORIAL

At the close of the Sunday School in St. James Church yesterday afternoon, the Sunday School tablet, given by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada to all Sunday Schools contributing $50 or over to the Forward Movement was unveiled by Superintendent Colonel D. Stewart after an impressive address by Rev. Dr. Fullerton. The tablet is of oak and on it are maple leaves, each bearing the name of a soldier who had made the supreme sacrifice. The names, fourteen in all, are those on the pulpit tablet in the church.

THE BISON SAFE.—The tug Bison, Captain Dixon, is safe. She arrived at Port Hastings Friday night after being badly tossed about in the storm and driven north of Prince Edward Island. She will coal there, and likely continue her voyage to Halifax. The Bison left Quebec on Monday in company with the tug Salem, but no word had been received of her until Friday night.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.—Between three and four o'clock Friday afternoon smoke was seen issuing out of the rear of Mr. James C. Ferguson's drug store at Souris. On going to the store the door was found locked The fire alarm was rung both from the school bell and the Presbyterian Church. The fire engine and hose were soon on the spot and the citizens in large numbers did all they could to extinguish the fire. It was seen the building could not be saved Mr. D. McEachern occupied the other side of the drug store. The fire rapidly spread to the next building occupied by Mr. M. A. Paquet, as a fruit and toy store. Some goods were saved, but so rapidly did the fire burn that this building also went down. The next a small building used as a barber shop by Mr. Homer Paquet and Dr. F. S. McDonald as an office was with much difficulty kept from being consumed. It was most fortunate that the fire was there arrested as it served as a buffer to save the Oakley Hotel kept by Mrs. Henry Dingwell, still so imminent was the danger that Mrs. Dingwell moved all her furniture out, and it being a large two story dwelling and every room occupied by guests, the loss and inconvenience to Mrs Dingwell is considerable. The drug store and barber shop was owned by the estate of the late John Knight and rents were collected by Mrs. William Knight. The writer is not aware of what insurance was on the buildings and stock consumed except that Mr. Paquet lately effected a small amount. So fiercely did the fire burn that an order was about being sent to Charlottetown for an engine but was again cancelled. A strong south west breeze was blowing at the time and the buildings west as well as the premises of Matthew McLean. Ltd., and the Canadian Bank of Commerce had a narrow escape.—S

FIERCE FIGHTING CONTINUES IN RUSSIA

LONDON, Dec. 11.—An official statement issued by General Denikine, the anti-Bolshevik leader on the Russian southwest front, reports fierce fighting in the Kamyshin, Kursk, Kiev and Tsarytsin regions.

The fighting, the statement claims, generally was favorable to Denikine's troops, who captured 1,200 prisoners at Tsarytsin on December 4.

The Bolsheviki statement on operations, received from Moscow today, also reports successes on the Don front and on the Persian Border, where, after severe fighting, the Reds ocupied Kazaudzhik, taking 1,200 prisoners and much booty.

A further Bolsheviki communication admits the abandonment of Berdichev, southwest of Kiev, but declares that the Reds have started another offensive, as a result of which heavy steel fighting is proceeding in Berdichev.

Another message says the Bolsheviki have ocupied Bielgorod, on the Bonetz, 73 miles south of Kursk.
