KAISER WILHELM'S LATEST WAR ORDER.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 21.—According to the Handelsblad Emperor William has issued an order that the untrained German reservists no longer shall be permitted to serve as guards of honor at the burials of prisoners of war.

"As much as we would like to give deceased prisoners of war the last military honors," the order of the Emperor is quoted as saying, "All considerations must give way to the main work of these troops, namely, the acquisition as quickly as possible of the necessary military training."

MILITIAMEN CHARGED WITH MANSLAUGHTER

TORONTO, Jan. 22.—Their own bail of ten thousand dollars each and two sureties of five thousand dollars are the terms upon which each of the three militiamen charged with manslaughter in connection with the shooting of the two Buffalo duck hunters at Port Erie will be granted their freedom till their trial, which will take place at the Weiland sittings which commence on March 2.

Constable Delaney must put up two sureties of $7,500 each, as well as his own surety of $15,000.

The total bail for the four men, including their own recognizances and the sureties they must secure is therefore $90,000.

WAR CORRESPONDENT TELLS OF STRUGGLE. MONTREAL, Jan. 23.—The picture of a forlorn-looking girl, huddling in her shawl, had been flashed on the screen when E. Alexander Powell, correspondent for the New York World, who has just returned from the war zone, said during his lecture in Windsor Hall last night: "That girl saw her father, two brothers, mother and sister killed; her home looted and burned; and now has not a friend, not a cent, in the world. She came of a respectable family; yet she was forced to go for forty-eight hours without food and only had the clothes on her back. And she is not alone. There are hundreds and thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, of respectable Belgian girls in the same circumstances as she is, and it is up to you and your nation to avenge, and to take care of the girl and her sisters."

The lecture contained much first-hand information of conditions in the fighting zone, illustrated by eighty-five lantern slides. It principally dealt with the war as affecting the Belgians and as being fought by the Germans. Vivid descriptions of the trail of the German army in King Albert's land were given, and of the efficiency of the German fighting-machine. The destruction of Aerschot and Louvain were especially dealt with, and both the German and Belgian stories of their razing given.

Mr. Powell spoke of Thompson, his photographer, having received a letter of recommendation from Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia. Thompson had tried to get to the front from Paris eight times. Just as often, he had been turned back. Then he thought of using Major-General Hughes' recommendation. It acted like a charm. "Oh, you are a Canadian, one of our brave allies who are coming to help us," the French officers said. It didn't matter that he was an American. He had authority from Canada, and therefore he must be befriended.

Two Views of Story. The German officer commanding had explained the destruction of Aerschot as follows: The officers had accepted the invitation of the burgomaster had gone to his house to sleep. In the night, a revolver shot rang out. The chief of staff was found dead, with five bullets in his back, put there by the fifteen-year-old son of the Burgomaster. That was the German side. The Belgians had said that the scream of the Burgomaster's daughter had WEDDING BELLS.—The home of Mrs. Samuel Prowse, Sherwood, was the scene of an interesting event on Wednesday, January 13th, when her youngest daughter, Ada F., was united in marriage to Mr. Allan S. Frizel, of the same place. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, Mr. John Stilson of Govan, Sask., entered the parlor to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Miss Agnes Gillespie. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. A. Westmoreland in the presence of the near relatives of the contracting parties. The bride was attired in a gown of blue silk with lace trimmings. The presents were numerous and costly testifying to the popularity of the bride and groom.

The presents to the bride was a handsome set of furs. The happy couple will reside at Sherwood.

CHARLOTTETOWN HOME GUARDS.—The original intention of the Committee of citizens, selected by the Charlottetown Home Guard, was to have a Battalion of volunteers consisting of five or six companies of about fifty men each. Three companies have been recruited so far under efficient officers, and drill weekly for an hour as follows. No. 1 Company under the command of Capt. W. B. Prowse fall in Thursday evenings. No. 2 Company, Capt. Ewen McKinnon in Command meets Tuesday evenings and No. 3 Company Commanded by Capt. Jas. Landrighan turn out Friday evenings. As soon as these companies become too large, other companies and officers will be appointed. In consideration of the excellent opportunity given for men to receive military instructions and be in readiness, to be of loyal service in Home Guard, or better still for over sea service, more men ought to volunteer, without being pressed to do so. If each man who has signed the service roll will plan to enlist another citizen in the movement, the whole matter is settled. All praise to the men who are now attending drills regularly, and by this action are encouraging their officers to get the men into line for service. There are a number however who have signed the Service Roll who are not attending weekly drills and to these, and those who attend to join, we would say, fall in, in any of the companies you desire and personally do what you can to get the men into line for service. There is no expense attached to this service, and much good to be derived personally, and otherwise. A number of citizens have expressed the wish to see the Home Guard turn out some evening for a march out. This will be done later but the call at present is for willing volunteers. No. 3 Company turns out tomorrow night at 8 p. m. for Drill instruction at Drill Hall.

A PHILOSOPHER ON JOURNALISM. Some of the remarks of Irvin S. Cobb to Yale men, in a recent address in journalism indicate keen interest and broad philosophy. For example:—

Writing is a trade to be learned, like bricklaying.

I don't think there is such a thing as a born writer.

A college education neither makes nor mars a man if he is born to be a newspaper man—I do not say born a newspaper man.

Good reporters are the scarest and most valuable things in the newspaper business of today.

The best thing I ever wrote was a story in a daily newspaper. Probably no one remembers it but me, but I know I have never done anything better.

One of the best features of a course in Journalism is that it is good as an antidote for too much study of English. The tendency of many courses in literature is to give the idea that the English language is an end and not a means.

We commend especially that last suggestion. The fellow who has nothing to say can't get into the news columns of a daily paper no matter how skillful he writes his nothings. He may have studied Addison. He may imitate De Quincey in sentence-formation. He may, in his own judgment, be a Dickens and a Hawthorne in one. But the question of the blue-pencil arbitrator is "What has happened?" and the worth of the happening is what counts. Language is a means, not an end. That, indeed, is what it should be in all literature.

awakened the household. She was found struggling with the chief of staff and then the son had shot him five times in the back. As a result, the Burgomaster and his son were executed, forty hostages lined up and shot, and then from sixty to one hundred and sixty prominent citizens were sent to eternity by having a machine gun turned on them. At Louvain, the Germans said they had destroyed the city because the Belgians had attacked them with guns and rifles after the city had been garrisoned by Germans for two weeks. The Belgians said the Germans had fired on approaching Germans, whom they took for enemies in the dark, and had razed the city to cover their mistake.

YOUTH'S DARING LED TO VICTORY. NORTHERN FRANCE, Jan. 23.—The general commanding the district was waiting on the platform to greet Thorel, a young infantryman, on the hospital train from the trenches. He looked such a boy, this young wounded infantryman, as he was carried from the train, but he smiled through his pain as the general congratulated him on his bravery and examined his medallion militaire, which Gen. Joffre himself had pinned on his breast.

Thorel is one of the youngest heroes of the war. It was near Ypres that his regiment was ordered to retake the ground that the French had lost a little while before. The first attack failed, and the second was being attempted when it was decided, in view of the difficulties of the ground, to postpone it until night. Thorel was in the front rank and, carried along by his enthusiasm, he did not hear the order to retire, and continued to dash forward, believing he was followed by his comrades.

At last he reached a deserted trench and sprang into it. Then when there was time to look around he found to his surprise he was alone.

Retreat was impossible, for as he peeped ahead he saw crowds of Germans coming and going in another trench only twenty-five metres away. The time had come to act, and his mind was set on it. Making a dash for his rifle under the shelter, he brought the sights on a German and pulled the trigger. The German fell forward, and going in another trench, a volley came from the German trench, but Thorel was under good cover and was not hit. He continued firing rapidly, and more than 150 of his own hand-dredged cartridges had been expended when the Germans, persuaded by his activity that the trench was strongly held, bolted to another position further to their rear. Some of them in their flight fell to the still unconquered infantryman.

At last, all his ammunition gone, Thorel retired and told his officer about the unoccupied trench in which he had made his lonely fight, and about the other trench that the Germans had deserted under his fire. The French at once advanced, and in the trench from which the Germans had been driven they found arms and ammunition, as well as many evidences that the Germans had suffered severely. The heroism and coolness of one young fellow had won this position for his regiment.

EXECUTED SLAV FOR SHOOTING AT GERMAN AVIATOR NEAR LODZ. LODZ, Russian Poland, Dec. 29.—(Correspondence.)—Major Von H. had an important appointment at eleven—a court martial—and the visit to one of the Lodz battlefields had to be cut short for a rapid run back to Lodz. After the court martial the assistant judge said in response to a question: "Death sentence; he confessed."

He was a Polish citizen, a clerk in the Russian postal service, and the offence for which he was to suffer death was shooting at a German aviator a few nights earlier. Some in Lodz denounced him to the military authorities. He was arrested, and at first stoutly denied all guilt. At the court-martial, however, he admitted firing the shots at the aviator, stating that he had been ordered to do it by someone higher in authority. He heard his death sentence with characteristic Slav stolidity.

At four o'clock the same afternoon the condemned man was led out into the yard of the municipal prison, where the squad of nine bearded Landsturmer men awaited him. He seated himself in a chair against the wall and passively allowed his eyes to be bound. Only at the last moment did he exhibit any emotion, when he suddenly tore the handkerchief from his eyes, thrust his hand into his pocket, pulled from it his pocketbook and handed the sixty copecks it contained to the assistant judge.

Why, nobody knows, for he said nothing.

The handkerchief was readjusted and a volley rattled through the stone-walled courtyard.
