WALKOUT

San Francisco general strike committee decreed for the time being that milk and bread supplies should keep moving and that hospitals should have fresh meat also.

City officials discussed the advisability of setting up a central food depot to distribute necessities to everyone. Union leaders denied a report that the striking unions would move food into the city only for the members of their families.

Officers of the Electrical Workers Union said light and power circuits would be maintained and the Pacific Gas and Electric Company said its service would not be interrupted.

New riot equipment was issued to the mounted police, horses were equipped with special goggles. Mounted officers were given gas equipment, long range firearms and new type protective helmets.

Besides the 2,000 guardsmen on waterfront duty here the 4,000 others of the California militia were under instructions to be ready for instant service.

In the San Francisco presidio were 800 seasoned soldiers of the regular army, a powerful machine possibly available in eventualities, but officers there said they had received no call as yet and expected none.

ADD RELIEF .. ..

The Dominion Government has expressed the view that improvement in general employment conditions, and the recently launched $40,000,000 federal public works programme should be reflected more substantially in lowered relief costs. In some quarters the opinion is expressed that a closer check on relief disbursements would reveal abuses running into a great deal of money.

GERMANY HAS

played in the flower shows which attended the campaign.

The Nazi press poured forth to the German public over the weekend its praise of Hitler for his Reichstag speech and gave assurances of the world's approval.

All was praise for the Chancellor. His address justifying the violent deaths of 77 persons in the "Roehm revolt" was lauded to the skies.

The identity of the dead, however, unrevealed by Hitler, remained unpublished by the press, and a government spokesman said the official list will never see the light of day.

Special correspondents of German papers in New York, London, Paris, Warsaw, Rome and other world cities notified their newspapers in long dispatches that all the world is at least impressed and in most cases approves of the Chancellor's words.

The entire German press called Hitler "one of the greatest figures of all times."

"The nation thanks the Fuehrer for his stupendous speech," said the Nazi party official news service. "Gratitude and fidelity are the German people's reply."

One or another of the papers intimated that in France there was some disappointment that Hitler had not spoken on German foreign policy, and that he had announced the return of the S.A. (storm troops) after the July leave, but these criticisms were not allowed to darken an otherwise bright picture.

So far as official Germany is concerned, the revolt of June 30 is a closed chapter.

The session of the Reichstag before which Hitler spoke constituted the last major political event before the summer holidays. Most of the higher government officials, especially those with families, left today, or are about to leave, and all the schools are closed for the month.

Hitler himself remains in Berlin, at least until Monday, when he is to receive the Protestant Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller who will present a report on his efforts to unite the German church.

APPEAL TO

joining today with England and ourselves in mutural admiration of the great discoverer of this land, must fill all hearts with rejoicing. But for us who are not only citizens of this favoured portion of the earth which Cartier visited in the long ago, but are also heirs of the same glorious faith which was the inspiration of and the sustaining power behind his great achievement, a primary duty must be fulfilled. When we recall the deep religious faith of Jacques Cartier, and ponder upon the vast consequences of his work in opening the portals of this immense country to the benefits of civilization and laying the first foundation of Christianity in this land, steeped for ages in the darkness of idolatry and the horrors of paganism, we realize that his life and its lessons overleap the boundaries of the merely natural and enter the domain of the supernatural, and we are forced to attribute to Jacques Cartier a place of honor among the great heroes of the human race.

Cartier's Piety

"Every human act, whether the humblest or the most heroic, gains its true worth and moral grandeur from the sublimity of the motive which inspires it, and to the everlasting glory of Jacques Cartier, the religious motive dominated all human considerations in his dauntless enterprise, and has caused a halo, akin to that of an Apostle, to be linked with his memory. What that motive was, which like a magnetic force seemed to draw him from the sheltering harbour of St. Malo 'to launch out into the deep,' he himself has recorded: 'l'augmentation de la tres saincte foy chrestienne'—the propagation of the holy Christian faith in these new lands made known to Europe by the discoveries of Christopher Columbus. The whole narrative of his voyages reveals to us the eminent piety which animated Cartier's soul, and with which he inspired his little group of adventurous companions. Like pious knights departing from a crusade, Cartier and his sailors devoutly confessed their sins, assisted at Holy Mass and received the Blessed Eucharist in the Cathedral of St. Malo, and then bravely set sail with the blessing of their Bishop still ringing in their ears: 'Adjutorium nostrum in nomine Domini.' The though of God was constantly with him as fair winds carried his frail vessels across the Atlantic. When he reached these shores he baptized with the name of saints of capes, the bays and rivers which he visited, and with repeated expressions of gratitude to God, he noted the important days of his discoveries by naming the feat days of saints, rather than the dates of the civic calendar. Finally, this great faith of Cartier manifested itself in the deeply significant act whereby he took possession of this country in the name of God for his earthly sovereign. Landing at Gaspe on July 24th, 1534, erected a gigantic cross, thirty feet high, its centre ornamented with a shield bearing three fleurs-de-lis, and the words 'Vive le Roy de France.' Peering from the recesses of the dense forests, the Indians watched this strange scene in wonderment, and, in the words of Cartier, 'as soon as the cross was up we altogether kneeled down before it, and with our hands towards heaven, yielded thanks to God, then we made signs to them, showing them the heavens and that all our salvation depended only on Him Who in them dwelleth; whereat they showed great admiration, looking first to one another and then at the cross."

Bishop Ross Quoted

Commenting on this touching event, the present illustrious Bishop of Gaspe, Monseigneur Ross uses these noble words: "A 'mystic epic' commenced with the cross at Gaspe. From that moment Canada was officially marked with the sign of Redemption, and that cross, in an endless procession, has penetrated to the farthest interior of the country, as a beacon on our lakes and rivers, as a guide-post along the shadowy pathways of our boundless forests, dominating the summits of hills and mountains, crowning the spires of our churches, and radiating throughout the whole land the civilizing influence of our religion of love and peace. Cartier was the precursor who 'made straight the paths' for the preaching of the Gospel in our land. His immortal act of faith was prophetic of events which followed. Inspired by the same noble impulses, Champlain and a veritable army of apostles, missionaries, hewers of wood and tillers of the soil found the secret for accomplishing their heroic tasks which have made the life of our people one of the most touching epochs in history. Cartier was a hero, but a Christian hero; and the Church in Canada cannot permit the centenary of his arrival in this land to pass without proclaiming his virtue and thanking God Who inspired him to place the very cradle of our Canadian nationality under the beneficient banner of the Cross.'

Observance of Anniversary

"These words must strike a very responsive chord in every Catholic's heart in Canada, and in unison with our brethren in other dioceses we will offer fervent prayers that Canada may ever be worthy of its destined role as a great and truly Christian country. This centenary anniversary of Cartier's arrival has special significance in this diocese, for not only did he land at several places within our confines before reaching the mainland, but we have always been proud to number among our clergy, our Religious and devoted laity so many whose ancestors came from Sunny France, and who, through trials and triumphs have been loyal to the great Christian tradition which Cartier exemplified in his career, and who still sing God's praises in the ancient tongue that Cartier spoke. We therefore direct that on Sunday July 22nd, the Votive Mass in honor of the Most Holy Trinity (tamquam pro re gravi) be offered by all the clergy of the Diocese, and a solemn 'Te Deum' be sung as an act of thanksgiving to God for the manifold blessings bestowed upon our beloved country during the past four hundred years, and as an humble supplication that the spiritual supremacy of Christ may be always recognized and obeyed throughout the far-flung provinces of Canada. On the following Tuesday, July 24th, it will be our happy privilege to officiate at Holy Mass on the reputed spot of Cartier's landing in the Magdalen Islands, and to bless a large commemorative cross which will henceforth crown the modest summits of 'Les Demoiselles,' to be seen far out to sea, the glorious sign of our Redemption, shining above the mists and turning the thoughts of mariners towards their eternal fatherland.

True Patriotism

"But these events, we trust, will not be without their lesson to all who pride themselves on the names of Catholic and Canadian, no matter what their racial origin may be. When that historic event, which we commemorate, happened four centuries ago, this world was just entering upon one of the greatest cataclysms of its history, which, in its dreadful consequences, not only changed the face of Europe many times over, but has brought to our country thousands of new settlers from other lands whose fidelity to the ancient faith was just as vivid and vibrant as was Cartier's. Someone has said that the 'religious idea presided at the discovery, at the exploraion and at the first establishment of Canada'; we might add that 'the religious idea' has influenced to a remarkable extent the character of the various immigrations which have flowed into this country in the course of time, bringing with them different traditions of race and culture and creed. It is not surprising therefore, that misunderstandings and difficulties should have occurred in the slow process of assimilating these divergent elements into one harmonious whole, but happily these discordant notes are gradually becoming more and more remote. It is, plainly, the Christian duty of all loyal citizens to constantly preach and practice the very highest forms of patriotism. Unfortunately in every country there are men and women whose patriotism becomes operative only when there are wars and rumours of wars. But real patriotism should function most earnestly in times of peace. Good citizenship is a very essential form of patriotism; the good citizenship which is constantly interested in the common welfare; the good citizenship which is personally concerned with the formation of just and sane laws, and which, after their passing, loyally obeys them; the good citizenship which respects the rights of others and upolds the supremacy of God's laws at all times while never faltering in national allegiance. Jacques Cartier was such a patriot, who knew how to 'render to God the things that are God's and to Caesar the things that are Caesar's', and if this anniversary teaches us this ancient Christian lesson in patriotism it will prove a lasting benediction to Canada.

Cardinal Villeneuve's Appeal

"Speaking recently in Toronto, the beloved Archbishop of Quebec, Cardinal Villeneuve said these stirring words which should be studied seriously by every Canadian worthy of the name of patriot: 'Our country is not a mere aggregation of persons, of families inhabiting the same soil, having among themselves relations more or less intimate. Not so! It is an association of living souls, subject to a social organization, to be defended and safeguarded at all costs, under the leadership of those presiding over its fortunes. The feeling that the people of a country live a common life and have a common interest in its welfare leads to patriotism, which may be defined as an integral principle of order and of unity and an organic bond of the members of a nation. The finest thinkers of Greece and Rome placed patriotism at the head of the natural virtues. Aristotle, the prince of philosophers of antiquity, held disinterested service to the State to be the very ideal of human duty, and the religion of Christ makes patriotism a positive law; there is no perfect Christian who is not also a perfect patriot. Edmund Burke the famous orator, once said that to love the locality in which we dwell and the society in which we move is the first principle of public affections. That is very true; but our love must not be confined to our village or town, but must extend to our provinces and country, and it should be accompanied by a deep feeling of loyalty to His Majesty the King, and to that world-wide Empire, of which we are happy to form part.'

A Lofty Idea

"How wonderful Canada would be if all the citizens were imbued with this lofty ideal of patriotism—if their love of country was based on the immutable principles of justice and charity. As Cardinal Newman once said: 'Private virtue is the only sure foundation of public virtue, and no national good is to be expected, though it may now and then accrue, from men who have not the fear of God before their eyes',—a truth which another famous Englishman, Sir John Seely, expressed in the striking epigram: 'No nation will ever find its place permanently in the world that has not something of the Church about it. For, just as family loyalty does not confine affection and friendship to the home circle, so Christian patriotism, even in its most intense form, does not exclude appreciation, admiration, and even love of those who differ from us in blood, or creed or culture. Genuine patriotism, as distinguished from the false chauvinistic attitude which so often parades under its name, is expansive enough in its scope to embrace ultimately the whole human race within the ambit of its benevolence.

"May God grant that all Catholic Canadians be apostles of such a patriotism. You, dear brethren, can practice that patriotism by basing your conduct in your business, social and political life upon the eternal principles of justice, truth, and righteousness, together with a devout recognition of God's overruling power which governs all things by His Wisdom and Whose superintending Providence watches over the affairs of nations as well as of individuals. You can show true patriotism by informing yourselves on all questions of public welfare, followed by the conscientious exercise of your franchise. You can and should practice this patriotism by daily praying to God for the welfare of our country and for the heavenly guidance of our legislators, that they may have always a Christian outlook upon their responsibilities so as to enact and enforce only such laws as well be conducive to the best interests of our beloved Canada, and to the earthly peace and happiness of its citizens, without making more difficult that 'straight and narrow path which all must follow in order to become future citizens of heaven."

INSTITUTES HELD FINAL SESSION

The final session of the Women's Institute was held on Saturday morning in the Prince of Wales College Hall. The president, Mrs. Harrison MacFarlane, Fernwood, who was in the chair, was appointed delegate to the Dominion Bienniel Convention, with Mrs. Samuel Mellish, Convenor, that on home The report on the League of Nations was presented by Mrs. L. B. Mellish, Convenor, that on Home Economics by Miss Yvonne Doiron, and that on Child Welfare by Mrs. Allan Wyand. An address was delivered by Dr. P. A. Creelman, M.D., C.M., Superintendent of the Provincial Sanatorium.

Resolutions

Following was the report presented by Mrs. Malcolm McLeod, Convenor of the Resolution Committee:

Whereas we as delegates desire to express our sincere appreciation to His Honour the Lieut.-Governor, Hon. W. J. P. MacMillan, Premier, Mr. Samuel Kennedy, Mayor of Charlottetown, Hon. Be it therefore resolved that the members in convention extend our sincere thanks to all who have made this convention such a success.

And whereas the question of world peace is such an important one we deem it advisable that a study of world peace be added to the curriculum of the public schools.

Resolved therefore that we ask the Board of Education to arrange a definite course of study on this subject.

Whereas it is necessary to the intellectual and moral welfare of children that they attend school according to the law laid down for compulsory education, and

Whereas it is necessary in order to secure the best results and accomplish the most good among children that the law of compulsory education be enforced in all districts.

Be it therefore resolved that this convention assembled do petition the Provincial Department of Education to take into imemdiate consideration the advisability of enforcing the law, already in existence, regarding compulsory education.

And whereas the Provincial Sanatorium is doing such valuable work in the prevention and cure of tuberculosis.

Be it therefore resolved that the Institutes continue their efforts to assist this worthy cause.

And whereas the Carnegie Library is such a benefit to both adult and juvenile education.

Be it therefore resolved that the sincere thanks of this convention be conveyed to the Carnegie Foundation and the Provincial Government for their generosity in this respect.

And whereas the Red Cross Society is doing such good work throughout the Province,

Be it therefore resolved that all Institutes help to carry out this noble work through our schools.

The following greeting was read from Major T. E. MacNutt, President of the Charlottetown Board of Trade.

As President of the Board of Trade I wish to extend our best wishes to the Women's Institutes for a very successful convention and assure them of our co-operation in any matter relating to the welfare of our province and hope that the members of the convention will use their best efforts to advance the interests of Island industries.

Greetings wer ealso received from Mrs. A. E. Walker, President of the Federated Women's Institute of Canada.

League of Nations

Following is the report of Mrs. Lester B. Mellish, Montague, Convenor of League of Nations:

Madam President, supervisors and fellow workers:—

I herewith submit the annual report of the League of Nations Department of the Women's Institute of this province. It affords me much pleasure to be able to tell you of the gratification which has been mine as the questionnaires came in from your Institutes. The answers showed a real heart interest in the League of Nations, disarmament and world peace.

Many Institutes gave prizes for best essays on World Peace. These essays were read at public meetings or at school closing concerts.

Believing that not now but in years to come the League of Nations will be justified, the aim of Women's Institutes has been to interest the younger generation in what other nations are doing.

In regard to the study of the principles of the League, I communicated with Board of Education, reminding them of the study carried on during the past year in the city schools by the Imperial Daughters of the Empire, under the capable direction of Mrs. R. H. Rogers. This correspondence may be the means of having a suitable study book placed on the public school curriculum of this province.

Peace cannot be maintained unless the people, especially the young, are instructed. With this in mind, many of our Institutes have had their local convenor of League of Nations, or some informed person, address their Institutes and schools on World Peace and the principles of the League.

Notwithstanding Germany's withdrawal from the League, the attitude of Russia, Japan, France and the United States, we still believe in it. That great statesman, Sir Robert Borden, said of the League—"The most wonderful venture ever attempted by human co-operation." Gen. Smuts—"One of the miracles of history." Of what account are the minor mistakes of the League, compared with its accomplishments. While the main purpose is "Preservation of Peace," we know it has many avenues of interest that are of vital importance. The limitations of narcotics for instance, slavery, with its five millions still in bondage, mostly in Africa, the liquor traffic. Indeed the duties of the League are legion.

We know that World Peace is menaced now as at no time since the Great War. We co-operated, as a great organization, to help win in that mighty conflict. We shall not be idle now, but unitedly work, just as loyally, that a lasting peace may be ours.

We are told half a million Canadians signed the Disarmament Petition. This shows the strength of peace sentiment in our fair land. There were literally truckloads of petitions presented to the League of Nations at Geneva. This, also, is evidence that the world wants peace.

The first number on the questionnaire on League of Nations was—"Give reasons why you want World Peace." With one exception, this was answered by a longing cry that our youth be saved from the horrors of another war. Evidence of how woman's heart must have been wrung by the carnage of the Great War.

When Mrs. Zimmerman, wife of a famous Oxford professor on international affairs, was on a recent lecture tour through Canada, she spoke on Peace. She said—"Peace begins at home. Stop worrying about menace, war scares, etc., and set about creating more friendly relations with the foreigner in our midst. In that hour she was expected to speak on "The sins of Europe." Instead she told of the unfriendliness of Canadians to hours were rounding up prisoners.

The encounter was the most serious disorder of the day, but government officials received incomplete reports of disturbances elsewhere, and expressed the fear that more may have been killed. One Nazi was killed in Vienna yesterday.

A communique issued by the government charges that the disturbances today were fostered by Socialists of several provinces, particularly those who are members of the Republican guard, in connection with an observation of the anniversary of the burning of the Vienna Palace of Justice July 15, 1927. The week-end wave of terror plunged cities into darkness, temporarily paralyzed street car systems, and resulted in damage to telephone booths, mail boxes, hotels and cafes. For an hour last night not a street car in all Vienna was moved because of the dynamiting of a distant power plant.
