THE COMRADE IN WHITE

Strange tales reached us in the trenches. Rumors raced up and down that 300-mile line from Switzerland to the sea. We knew neither the source of them nor the truth of them. They came quickly and they went quickly. Yet somehow I remember the very hour when George Casey turned to me with a queer look in his blue eyes, and asked if I had seen the Friend of the Wounded.

And then he told me all he knew. After many a hot engagement a man in white had been seen bending over the wounded. Snipers sniped at him. Shells fell all around. Nothing had power to touch him. He was either heroic beyond all heroes, or he was something greater still. This mysterious one, whom the French called the Comrade in White, seemed to be everywhere at once. At Nancy, in the Argonne, at Soissons and Ypres, everywhere men were talking of him with hushed voices.

But some laughed and said the trenches were telling on men's nerves. I, who was often reckless enough in my talk, exclaimed that for me seeing was believing, and that I didn't expect any help but a German knife if I was found lying out there wounded.

I WAS SHOT

It was the next day that things got lively. The bit of the front. Our big guns roared from sunrise to sunset, and began again in the morning. At noon we got word to take the trenches in front of us. They were 200 yards away, and we weren't well started till we knew that the big guns had failed to do their work of preparation, but not a man dared to go forward, not a man dared to advance 150 yards when we found it was no good. Our captain called to us to take cover, and just then I was shot through both legs.

By God's mercy I fell into a hole of some sort. I suppose I fainted, for when I opened my eyes I was all alone. The pain was horrible, but I didn't dare to move lest the Germans should see me, for they were only fifty yards away, and I did not expect mercy. I was glad when the twilight came. There were men in my own company who would run any risk in the darkness if they thought a comrade was still alive.

The night fell, and soon I heard a step, not stealthy, as I expected, but quiet and firm, as if neither darkness nor death could check those untroubled feet. So little did I guess what was coming that, even when I saw the gleam of white in the darkness, I thought it was a peasant in a white smock, or perhaps a woman deranged. Suddenly, with a little shiver, of joy or of fear, I don't know which, I guessed that it was the Comrade in White. And he was, for the moment the German rifles began to shoot, and I didn't dare to move lest the Germans should see me, for they were only fifty yards away, and I did not expect mercy. I was glad when the twilight came. There were men in my own company who would run any risk in the darkness if they thought a comrade was still alive.

I MUST HAVE FAINTED

I must have fainted again, for I woke to consciousness in a little cave by a stream, and the Comrade in White was washing my wounds and binding them up. It was in terrible pain, but I was happier at that moment than ever I remember to have been in all my life before. I can't explain it, but it seemed as if all my days I had been waiting for this without knowing it. As long as his hands touched me and those eyes peered at me I did not seem to care any more about sickness or health, about life or death. And while he swiftly removed every trace of blood and mire I felt as if my whole nature was being washed, as if all the grime and soil of sin were going, and if I were once more a little child.

HE TOO HAD BEEN WOUNDED

I suppose I slept, for when I woke this feeling was gone. I was a man and I wanted to know what I could do for my friend to help him or to serve him. He was looking towards the stream, and his hands were clasped in prayer; and then I saw that he had been wounded. I could see as it were a shot-wound in his hand, and as he prayed a drop of blood gathered and fell to the ground. This hand, which could not help it for that wound of his seemed to me a more awful thing than any that bitter war had shown me.

"You are wounded too," I said faintly. Perhaps he heard me, perhaps it was the look on my face, but he answered gently, "This is an old wound, but it has troubled me of late." And then I noticed sorrowfully that the same cruel mark was on his feet. You will wonder that I did not know sooner. I wonder myself. But it was when I saw his feet that I knew him.

HE WILL COME FOR ME TOMORROW

"The Living Christ" - I had heard the chaplain say it a few weeks before, but now I knew that he had come to me, me who had put my life out in the hot fever of my youth. I was longing to speak and to thank Him, but no words came. And then he rose swiftly, and said, "Lie here today by the water. I will come for you tomorrow. I have work for you to do, and you will do it for me."

HOW THIN PEOPLE CAN PUT ON FLESH

A NEW DISCOVERY. Thin men and women - that big, hearty, strong man you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, and your food doesn't work and stick, and the digestive organs are not getting enough nourishment from your food to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, strong, clean, fresh cream sawdust diet, Sargol, and funny ribs-ones. Cut out everything but meals you are eating now and eat with every one of those single Sargol tablets. In two weeks note the difference.

DUTY OF DEMOCRACY TO GO STEADILY FORWARD

Sir John Simon, Home Secretary addressed an open-air meeting at the Essex County Cricket Ground, Leyton, Stanley Johnson presided. There was an audience of about 2,000 people.

Sir John Simon said he came there to ask them to consider how we stood after nearly twelve months of war. He did not mean that he came there to tell them Cabinet secrets, except that the Cabinet was a united Cabinet, devoting itself with all its strength to the single purpose for which it was called together. We entered into this war because Europe was threatened by a domination to be exercised over the liberties of all of us. We did not hesitate in deciding in what direction our duty lay, and looking back now after twelve months of war we had more reason than ever to say that we were right in going into this struggle and we were more determined than ever to see this struggle through.

We entered it a united people and we were as united today as when the war began. The Prime Minister at the outbreak of war became not the leader of a party, but the accepted leader of the nation. He stood then, as he stood now, the embodiment of our calm resolve and our fixed determination to win by victory the object for which we entered the war.

The Duty of Restraint

The Cabinet had been reconstituted to show the world that all partisan and party considerations were completely set on one side. Every patriotic man and woman in England felt that to use such times to raise partisan issues would be intolerable, and to use such times to forward personal ambitions or foment personal controversies would be disgusting and would be fatal. If that restraint were imposed most willingly upon the political leaders there was a corresponding duty of restraint on the public at large. It was a great deal easier to criticize than to fight in the trenches. This war will not be won by criticizing the fatal. It will be won and it has got to be won by resolute and intelligent action. It is not by sterile and sterile controversies in order that we may address ourselves - King, Ministers, Parliament, and people - to justifying the splendid heroism of our soldiers in the field.

There is, how strongly it is expressed, or what consequences may come from it as long as the criticism is held back until we have beaten the enemy. (Cheers.)

The Example of France

Democracy was on its trial. Democracy was at death-grips with tyranny. It was up to us to show that the democratic basis was the best basis to carry a nation through a war. The organization, skill, power, and preparation of the Germans could hardly be exaggerated, but it must not be forgotten that these were the fruits of tyranny and despotism. It was by a democracy showing that it was not only willing to enter into a war but to carry it through, and that reverses instead of defeating a democracy stimulated it to further efforts, that we could justify the political faith that was common to every Englishman.

Let us look to France in order to see how another great European democracy understood the business of carrying on a war. In reply to some attacks on some of the departments of the French War Office, the French Prime Minister said these wise words: "Who could say that in an enterprise so complicated as this no errors have been made. Perhaps other men might have avoided them. But, however much I respect the eminent qualities of those who would not have committed others. The Government has done its best to unite Parliament and the country in the common task. It is not right that words of pessimism and discouragement should be used at the present time. France will go on to the end. There were those who were fighting in the trenches, and there were those who ought to give a good example at home, and who should have confidence in the splendid nation who had been fighting for eleven months. We would continue fighting with every means that it had till justice should return to the earth." There was not one member of the French Chamber who heard that speech, said Sir John Simon, who did not realize that the duty of the democracy was to go forward, keeping its eyes steadily on the enemy until he was struck down.

"Unworthy Panic"

If that was the temper in which the French democracy, which had sacrificed far more lives than we had, faced its trial, ought not we, who prided ourselves on English sang-froid, English courage, and English absence of nerves, to be counted upon to do the like? Believe me, he continued, sterile controversies about the past, unworthy panic about the future, cultivated hysteria about the present - all these things are poisonous gases emitted - whether those who emit know it or not - with no other result save to justify and to confuse the judgment and temper of the nation. (Cheers.) Let us beware lest by raking up the past we raise a dust which will prevent us from seeing clearly what is the object at which we are aiming. No man, least of all a man who shared Cabinet responsibilities, would wrap himself up in a sort of smug satisfaction, thinking that nothing further need be done. I say plainly, he added with emphasis, that of we do not do more in the future than we have done in the past we are going to be beaten, and he is going to be beaten, and because it is certain that there is no sacrifice that this country will not

RUSSIANS OFFER STUBBORN RESISTANCE

PETROGRAD via LONDON, Aug. 1. - I hereby solemnly declare that we will not conclude peace until we have won. The message of the Burbs Gazette today, printed in all the languages of Russia's Allies says for a year past the enemy has been threatening the freedom of the world. We deeply appreciate the work of ourselves and of our allies in exerting combined pressure on him on all sides. A firm confidence in victory and in the community of our world wide interests and the final triumph of right fires the spirits of the nation. It has been our guiding star throughout a year of bloodshed and will serve in the coming months, may be a year of struggle. Russia greets her Allies. All hail to their heroic loyalty and their determination to stand by her to the end till light dispels the gloom.

Aluding to the War Loan, he said he had been asked by the Chancellor of the Exchequer only that morning that it had been supported in the City in a way that fulfilled his expectations. (Cheers.) In conclusion, he asked who there was that doubted that if we were true to ourselves and one another, if we reserved criticism to the proper time, and thought about nothing but beating the enemy, that we could do it and would do it, thereby ridding our own country and helping to rid the countries of our Allies of the greatest danger and the greatest evil against which the free communities of Europe had ever struggled to ultimate victory.
