The Red Lamp

Mary Roberts Rhineheart

With the lawns cut and the shrubbery trimmed, the place grows increasingly lovely. At low tide the beach is covered with odds and ends from the mysterious life of the sea red and white starfish, sea urchins, and disintegrated jellyfish. Sea-gulls pick up mussels, shove over a flat-topped rock, drop them onto its surface and then swoop down upon the broken shell, with a warning cry to other gulls to keep away.

So clear was the water this afternoon that rowing to the old sloop, I could see the barnacles encrusting it, and the long strings of kelp which hang from its like green and matted hair. Edith, bare-armed and slim in the canoe, paddled around it appraisingly.

"Needs a shave and a hair cut," she decided. The boat-house is ready for young Halliday. She has put in it a great deal of love and one or two of my most treasured personal possessions.

"That isn't by any chance my smoking stand?" "But you aren't going to smoke this summer, Father William," she says, and tucks a hand into my arm. "I heard you say so yourself."

It has a sitting room, bedroom and kitchenette, but no bath. "He can use the sea," says Edith easily. "And take a cake of soap in with him." "And wash himself ashore," I suggest, and am frowned down, probably as too odd for such ribaldry. Jane is very serene. Now and then, as she sits on our small verandah with her tapestry, I see her raise her eyes and glance toward the other house, but she does not mention it, nor do I. I notice that, like Maggie Morrison, she does not, very near to it, but she appears to have adopted an attitude of laissez faire.

But she absolutely refused to take the picture of the house Larkin asks for. Not that she put it like that. "I haven't had any luck with the camera lately," she said. "You take them, or let Edith do it." The result of the collaboration, which followed early this afternoon is still in doubt. Jane intended to develop and print them this evening.

And so our life goes on. We retire early. I generally slightly scent from the cold cream of Edith's good night kiss. Clara, too, goes up early, probably looking under her bed before retiring into it. And Jane sits and sews while I make entry in this Journal; she is I think, both jealous and faintly suspicious of it!

At ten o'clock or so we let Jock out, and he looks under the mysterious door and then turns out the gates and into the highroad, where for a half hour or so he chases rabbits and possibly looks for a bear. At ten-thirty he scratches at the door, and we admit him and go up to bed. Behind the drain pipe!

Later: I have just had a surprise amounting to shock. Jane finds she had forgotten the black Japanese lantern with a red slide which she uses in the mysterious rites of developing pictures, and suggests that we go to the other house and use the red lamp there.

"But I can bring it here." "I am through being silly about the other house, William," she says with an air of resolution. "Anyhow, the pantry there is better, and you can sit in the kitchen. Bring a book or something."

She has, poor Jane, very much the air of Helena Lear's kitten the day Jock cornered it, and it came out resolutely and looked him in the eye. In effect, Jane is going out to meet her bugaboo and stare it down.

June 29th. Jane is in bed today, and I am not all I might be, although I managed to get an indifferent print of two to Lark this morning.

It is well enough for cold-blooded and nerveless individuals to speak of fear as a survival of that time when, in our savage state, we found her in a dead faint, underneath the window. When she revived, she maintained that she had seen Uncle Horace.

Her statement runs about as follows: She had not felt particularly uneasy on entering the house, "although I had expected to," she admits. Nor at the beginning of operations in the pantry. The cold air, however, had had a peculiar quality to it; it "froze" her, she says; she felt rigid with it.

And it continued after she heard me close the kitchen door. This wind, she says, was not only so cold that she called to me, but she had an impression that it was coming from somewhere near at hand, and she seemed to see the curtains blowing out at the window. The lower sash was down, as she could tell by the reflection of the red lamp in it, but she went to the window to see if the upper sash had been lowered.

With the darkness outside, the glass had become a sort of mirror, and she said her own figure in it startled her for a moment. She stood staring at it, when she realized that she was not alone in the room. Clearly reflected, behind and over her right shoulder, was a face. It disappeared almost immediately, and I have my own private doubts about her recognition of it as Uncle Horace, which I believe is post factum. But I am obliged to my baby and cannot do my work. She told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking two bottles I could get up and dress myself. I also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. When I first took the medicine I only weighed seventy-eight pounds. Now I weigh twice as much. If I get out of sorts or weary and can't sleep I always take another bottle of the Vegetable Compound. I find it wonderfully good for female troubles, and have recommended it to my neighbors. The following were guests at the North Shore House on Friday:—Misses Carrie and Gladys Holman, Summerside; Mrs. Stanley Green and daughter Miss Constance of New York; Misses Celia and Constance Burrows of Summerside, Mrs. Howatt, Tryon; Mrs. W. Mr. Leslie Donald, Moncton, arrived in Baltic on Saturday, Sept. 11th. He was accompanied by his sister Miss Clara who had spent several weeks with her brothers in Moncton.

Misses Jean and Mollie Currie, R. N., New York, left Tuesday morning to resume their work after were surrounded by enemies, dangers, and a thousand portents in skies we could not comprehend, and to insist that when knowledge is still in doubt, fear and superstition fly out of the window.

Yet, stripped of its trimmings, the empty, echoing house, its room put on its own private thoughts about its possible tragedy, the incident loses much of its terror; is capable, indeed, of a quite normal explanation.

That is, that Jane either saw someone outside the pantry window, or was the victim of a subjective image of her own producing.

To put the affair in consecutive shape At eleven o'clock I had moved the red lamp from the den in the other house to the pantry and connected it. I also lighted the kitchen, and established myself there with "The Life and Times of Cavendish," a book which I considered safe and sufficiently unexciting under the circumstances.

Jane seemed to be going very well beyond the pantry door, and after a time I ceased the reassuring whistling with which I had been affirming my continued presence within call, and grew absorbed in my book.

It must have been 11:15 when she called out to me sharply to know where a cold wind was coming from, and although I felt no such air I closed the kitchen door. It was within a couple of minutes of that, or thereabouts, that I suddenly heard her give a low moan, and the next instant there was the crash of a falling body.

When I opened the pantry door I found her in a dead faint, underneath the window. When she revived, she maintained that she had seen Uncle Horace.

a pleasant holiday with relatives in Charlottetown and Malpeque.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Scott and Mrs. Stevenson of North River, spent Sunday the guests of Mrs. H. A. Stewart, Hamilton.

Citizens of this vicinity were shocked and saddened by the untimely passing of Mr. Charles MacDonald of Borden under such very sudden and sad circumstances. Mr. MacDonald was a native of Hamilton where he was well known and highly respected. Many from this community were in attendance at the funeral and thus paid their tribute of love and respect to the deceased. Profound sympathy is extended to his widow, Mrs. Miss Nellie Bearstro formerly of Indian River, also his children and many other relatives and friends.

Chief Justice and Mrs. Matheson, Miss Dora Matheson and Mrs. MacCreedy of Charlottetown were guests of Dr. J. W. and Mrs. Keir on Friday evening. On their return they were accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Keir.

Miss Margaret Sencabaugh of Boston is the guest of Miss Anne Keir, Malpeque.

Messrs. L. D. MacNutt and Preston Green were visitors to Charlottetown on Labor Day.

Little Miss Sophie Manderson of Malpeque who was suddenly stricken with appendicitis on Sunday afternoon was removed to the Prince County Hospital where she underwent a successful operation.

Mrs. Percy L. Carr and two sons George and Billy left on return to their home in Grand Bank, Newfoundland on Tuesday evening after three weeks' visit with Mrs. Thomas MacNutt.

Miss Lena Donald, Charlottetown spent the week end with her parents Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Donald, Sea View.

Rev. James A. Ramsay of Moncton delivered two splendid addresses in Malpeque Church on Sunday, September 5th. The morning discourse was based on the words found in Acts 5 concerning Gamaliel's advice, the main thought being "Right is Right, since God is God" and right must prevail. The evening address was based on the text from Ruth 1:16 which relates the decision of Ruth. After a brief outline of the circumstances connected with the text, Mr. Ramsay pointed out that there the still momentous decisions to be made in which we should seek the guiding hand of God who knows the end from the beginning. There are choices of friendships—we must not drift into our friendships; there are choices in home life; there are choices in life service and in all these choices we must consider the will of God. We must cease building our castles in the air and make our dreams realities. We must build for character—not for worldly success but for eternal happiness. Mr. Ramsay appealed to the young men of Princeton congregation to give their lives to the ministry of the church.

When I first took the medicine I only weighed seventy-eight pounds. Now I weigh twice as much. If I get out of sorts or weary and can't sleep I always take another bottle of the Vegetable Compound. I find it wonderfully good for female troubles, and have recommended it to my neighbors. I will be only too glad to answer any letters I receive asking about it."—Mrs. WILLIAM RITCHIE, Box 486, Melfort, Saskatchewan.

Melfort, Saskatchewan.—"I had inward troubles, headaches and pains in my back and sides. I was so sick generally that I could not sit up and do my work for eight months. An aunt came to visit and help me as I was unable to attend to my baby and could not do my work. She told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking two bottles I could get up and dress myself. I also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine.
