THE OUTLAW. The Story of a Girl Who Didn't Want to Marry. By ETHEL LLOYD PATT.

Chapter XXXVI. The camera man had fulfilled his threat and tried to make me lose my position with the Champion Film Company.

"Suddenly as I was going through the scene, he had stopped his camera with a declaration that he could not film me properly. He said he was 'wasting hundreds of feet of film because she wouldn't do as she was told.'"

"Mr. Dayton, with a puzzled and angry look upon his face, had asked me, 'What's the matter?' He said he had warned me only a day or so before that I didn't film."

"The other day, when Mr. Dayton called me into his office and warned me I was not doing as well as the company had hoped I would, I came back to this man and told him I knew what he was doing but that I would give him one more chance."

"Before Mr. Dayton or the managing director could speak the camera man had broken in coolly: 'And that's a very likely story, isn't it? he sneered. 'I've been with this company for two years. I've taken some of your best films. My Lord! This girl's such a pippin that I'd risk my job to take her out for a feed, is she? No, sir! I don't blame the kid much. She's desperate. She's made the yarn up because she is desperate. But, just the same, I don't think so much of any one who goes in for that kind of lies.'"

"The managing director turned to Mr. Dayton. 'This man has always been very satisfactory,' he said non-committally. 'Of course,' said the camera man, and leaned easily against his machine. 'Oh, don't be silly!' I cried hotly. 'How could I make up such a story? Why look at me! I'm not a girl? Why would I say things like that? There would be some way of proving it.' My face began to quiver now and the tears were coming into my eyes."

"I tell you it's true. It is true. I said and stamped my foot. 'I'm not going to let them browbeat me.' 'But, Miss Birney,' interrupted Mr. Dayton quietly. 'It may be so, as you say, but facts are facts. The point is that we've tried you, a new girl, to give you a chance. We seem to have lost hundreds of dollars' worth of film through you. It's possible there's something in what you say. I don't know. But this is a business proposition with us. The simplest thing to me seems to be to let you go.'"

"You shant," I said, and didn't recognize my own voice. 'If you've lost hundreds of dollars worth of film through me, it's only fair to you and to me to give me one more chance.' 'No, wait,' I went on swiftly. 'If you can't use me in this film you've lost an awful lot. You'll have to look for another type like me, or the whole thing is ruined. If you give me one more chance—just a little chance—you can't lose much more, even if I don't focus. I can prove what I say.' 'You can't,' said the camera man gruffly. 'Yes, I can,' I declared. 'Only give me another camera man. Bring him right here now! You don't have to use more than ten feet of film and develop it. You give me a camera man who has never seen me before and I'll show you whether I can stay in focus!'"

"That's fair," said Mr. Dayton. "Oh, come on," said the managing director. "Fire the kid and get another." In my excitement I had gone close to Mr. Dayton. I took his hand, half dragging him towards the door of the studio. "No! no!" I reiterated. "I want another camera man!" He looked at me and smiled un- willingly. "And you shall have him, my dear," he said. "If you can register rage before him as you're doing now, you'll make your mark yet in the movie business."

The death of Mr. Joseph Ching of Red Point at the age of 76 years marks the passing away of a good and much loved man. A constant member of the Christian Church for many years, his life was marked by sincerity and steadfastness in the home, he was kind and thoughtful. Among his friends he was considered and charitable. A widow, a daughter of the late James Robertson, a daughter Mrs. Elmer Fraser and two sons Willard and Ewart are comforted by the thought of a well-spent life not ended but entered into that fuller life promised to the people of God. Rev. W. R. MacWalker conducted the funeral service speaking from the words: "The things that are seen are temporal; but the things that are not seen are eternal."

MRS. JOSEPH F. DUNN. A gloom was cast over the village of Fretown and the surrounding country on the morning of June 15th, when it became known that the death of the grim reaper had visited the home of Joseph L. Dunn and claimed for its victim Mrs. Dunn at the early age of 32 years. The deceased had been ailing but a short time and her husband and friends cherished the hope that she might be spared, but Providence decreed otherwise, and notwithstanding the best medical attendance and the most tender and devoted nursing she succumbed to the inevitable and her spirit took its flight into the mansions of bliss where happiness reigns supreme. That the young wife was truly verified in this case as she lived a most exemplary christian life and during her life, although suffering intensely at times she never murmured nor complained but bore it with patience and resignation to the Divine Will. She was visited frequently by her pastor, and she died fortified by the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church. Although her earthly pilgrimage was short, she will long be remembered in the community for her kind and cheerful disposition, merited for her love and esteem of all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, a fact which was clearly demonstrated by the beautiful floral tributes and the unusually large concourse of people that followed her remains to the Catholic Church on Saturday, the 18th, where a solemn High Mass of requiem was celebrated by the pastor, Rev. Fr. McQuaid, after which all that was mortal of an affectionate mother and a kind and loving sister was laid to rest in the cemetery adjoining the church. She leaves to mourn besides a sorrowing husband, and six children, Mrs. Benj. Murphy, East Bedford, Lot 12, Mrs. Melvin Rayner, Kill, Mrs. Alfred Wells, Albert, Wm. Fred, Jr., Alford, and Edmond Jones all of Roseville, Lot 3. The pall bearers were Messrs. Picton Reeves, Russel Burns, Bruce Burns, Ray Mulligan and Walter McArthur. PRINCE GREETED BY REBEL FLAG

A remarkable feature of the visit of the Prince of Wales to Liverpool was the display in many streets in the Irish quarter of St. John's. A prominent Sinn Feiner questioned as to whether any significance was to be attached to this, replied: "All I can say is that the order to do this came from Dublin."

Arnold Macleod Musical Prodigy And Painter

(By J. J. Dingman, Press Correspondent of Calgary, Formerly of Orwell, P. E. I.)

Did you people, who were born and raised in Prince Edward Island, ever stop to think if how many of the world's most notable men and boys are natives of that beautiful little stretch of greenfield bordering on the Atlantic Seaboard?

Arnold Macleod, the celebrated and talented boy musician and artist, who at thirteen is probably the greatest piano and portrait painter of his age on the continent, is a grandson of the Island. His parents are D. Macleod, born in Bequeque, and well known in both East and West and his mother was formerly Miss MacDonald, of Montague Bridge, P. E. I.

When Arnold was three years old, his parents presented him with a toy piano as a Christmas present. Despite the fact that it is extremely difficult to make anything resembling music emanate from one of these contraptions, yet the budding musician successfully played a couple of tunes with the keys, and he took up in Sunday school. He has been before the footlights for two or three years now and during that time he has played all the immortal classics of Beethoven, Mozart, Durand, Chopin and many of the other world famous of classical music.

Another and perhaps a greater marvel, is the undoubted talent of this remarkable boy for portraiture and landscape painting. Originality is the outstanding feature of his sketches being beyond even the wildest stretch of imagination. Being born in Calgary, in the very heart of the great prairie country, naturally he has seen little of the sea. But evidently he has inherited some of the P. E. Islander's inherent love of the ocean, for most of his original works are remarkably true pictures of the ocean and ocean going and fishing vessels, such as one sees on the coasts of the great old Island.

Very early in life Arnold began to show signs of the wonderful talent which so marks his playing now. When he was six years old he started to take music lessons from John M. Williams and the same year he played the piano in the Sunday School which he was attending at the time, taking the position of an experienced player with all the ease and savoir-faire of a veteran. Under the skilled and careful tuition of Mr. Williams, the youthful prodigy developed into a finished player very rapidly.

In an interview with John M. Williams, the well known music teacher remarked "It is strange to say, but Arnold has never composed one original bar of music. All his energy and wonderful versatility is concentrated on being a finished executant. But it is his sincerity, his penetrating griping personality, and his absolute absorption in his work while on the stage that attracts and holds fast the attention of the audience. There is that indefinable something in his playing termed by music lovers 'soul music' which appeals directly to the heart of any crowd, be they lovers of classical music or sophisticated vaudeville goers. Another thing about Arnold which has impressed me deeply is the remarkable ability he possesses for portrait painting. With absolutely no training in this line of endeavor, the boy has painted life-like images of Beethoven, Mozart, Durand, Schmolli, and many of the other famous past masters of the intricate art of musical composition. I firmly believe that if he receives the proper training and has the right atmosphere during the next five years that he will, by the time he is twenty-one, make a front position among the greatest players of the age."

In the monster musical festival held in Calgary recently, Arnold won the medal for being the best player of his age. Mr. Hall, the well-known judicator from New York City, who officiated as one of the judges, was so impressed with the boy's wonderful executive playing talent, that he is the lad's name and address, saying that he would make a name for himself in the world of music.

One unusual feature of his talent, is the fact that neither of his parents or any of his relatives ever possessed even an ordinary inclination towards art or music. The discovery that Arnold was probably one of the greatest musicians and artists of his age in North America, came like a thunderbolt from the sky.

In everyday life, however, he is nothing more or less than an ordinary boy, with the small boy's usual bent for naughtiness and pranks. His notable success has not turned his head in the least. As in the case of any other bright light of the intellectual world, he has been pampered and praised and catered to, yet he has retained a sane and normal view of his own attainments. He is shy, quiet and unassuming, and is the fortunate possessor of a personality which will turn enemies into friends by its attractive simplicity and sweet innocence. But please don't get the impression that he is a model child, not by any means. He is just as mettlesome and frolicsome and full of the wonderful joy of living as any normal, healthy boy. He can play baseball and holler and shout, with as much gusto as anyone.

and, in fact, is an all around sport and not at all a freak of nature. Here's hoping that he will make an honored name for himself among the greatest musicians of Musical America and that he will carry the flame and glory of old Prince Edward Island to the four corners of the earth.
