For The Cook

CHERRY JAM AND TARTS

Now that cherries are so delightfully abundant at the local stores, housewives should hasten to put up cherry jam and jelly for winter needs.

Filled cherry jam cookies—3 cups sifted flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 2-3 cup butter or other shortening, one-half teaspoon salt, 1 cup sifted brown sugar, 1 egg, well beaten, 1-3 cup milk, cherry jam, sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, and sift again.

Cherry jam—(Any kind except wild cherry or chokecherry)—4 packed cups (2 lbs.) pitted and crushed cherries, 7 cups (8 lbs.) sugar, 1 bottle pectin, 1/4 cup water. Use only fully ripened fruit. Pit cherries, crush thoroughly, and measure into large kettle.

Sour cherries may be pitted and left whole. Pack cups solidly, flooding with juice. Whole cherries will float, and the jam may be soft on top for several days. Crushing is recommended.

Findings Should Be Said Dorothy Dix

"After All, Isn't Silence a Greatly Overrated Virtue? Perhaps Sometimes We Say Too Much, But, Oh! How Often We Say Too Little," Declares Dorothy Dix

A California man is suing his wife for a divorce because, although they lived together in the same house, she has not spoken to him for seventeen years.

Doesn't this show what fussy, unreasonable creatures husbands are and how impossible it is to please them? No wonder so many wives give it up as a bad job and throw up their hands and quit.

Of course, men have always accused women of talking too much and pretended that it was a feminine weakness to which they were superior, but as a matter of fact, they like a woman to have a nimble tongue and to know how to use it.

No dumb girl ever has any beaux. She may be a living picture in looks and a college graduate who is entitled to write half the letters of the alphabet after her name, but if she sits up in a profound and meditative silence, she sits alone.

On the contrary, men expect women to make the conversational running, and to interest and amuse them, and that's why the girl who carries a peppy line of talk can always lead the girl who has nothing to say for herself at the post.

And in all good truth nobody's ideal of a woman who is pleasant to live with is a glum, silent woman. You can't picture the woman who never speaks unless she has something important to say as being the center of a cheerful, happy home.

Why, such a woman would be a wet blanket in a household that would keep her whole family chilled to the bone. She would be a skeleton at the feast. She would be asstentler that would shut up even the most confirmed gabbler and make everybody hush up as if they were at a funeral.

It takes a talkative woman to make a cheery household. It takes the sort of woman who can twitter on endlessly about nothing at all, who chirps to the canary and coos and gurgles to the baby and chats with the neighbors across the air shaft or over the back fence and who rushes at husband when he comes home in the evening with a volume of exclamations about: Is he tired, and has he had a hard day, and did he get his feet wet?

Stevenson rated the ability to be a good gossip as among the most desirable qualities that a wife could possess and certainly no women are more agreeable companions than those who have a gift for small talk, and who cannot go down the street, or to a club, or buy a roast without seeing or hearing something interesting and amusing.

Nor does it matter that their conversation is neither profound nor uplifting, but merely the small beer chronicles of the neighborhood. No one wants the roar of Niagara perpetually in their ears. They prefer the soothing babble of a brook.

So while men criticize women for talking too much, they don't really want them to stop. A man doesn't want to come home at night to a silent house. He doesn't want to spend an evening with a woman who never speaks. He may not feel like making conversation himself, but he wants to be talked to, and he would rather have a wife who nagged and waited up for him with a curtain lecture every time he stayed out late at night than one who went around in sullen silence and kept him wondering what she was thinking about.

Every husband feels that it is his duty to knock his wife for gossiping, but even that is a masculine gesture that is not to be taken seriously, because every wife will bear testimony that her husband never berates her for having related a piece of scandal to him until after she has told him the last detail.

After all, isn't silence a greatly overrated virtue? Perhaps sometimes we say too much, but oh! how often we say too little. We are quick to condemn, but how slow we are to praise, and our lack of approbation can hurt just as much as our fault-finding. We blurt out a word in anger that stabs like a knife, but we let those about us, whom we love, perish of heart hunger because we will not voice the affection and the appreciation that we really feel for them.

God knows in the last day, when we shall come to judgment, whether we shall regret most of the things we have said or left unsaid. DOROTHY DIX.

SCHOOL EXAMINATION AT WEST DEVON

The semi-annual examination of West Devon School was held on June 27, with a fairly large attendance of rate-payers and visitors present. The pupils were examined in the various subjects on the curriculum by their teacher, Mrs. Elmer McLennan, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Percy Trednick and Mrs. Thos. Boyle.

A public school certificate was presented to Verdun Trednick. The teacher received the congratulations of those present upon the splendid success which she has attained in her work during the past year. A beautiful gift was presented to her and an address which read as follows:— Dear Teacher:—We cannot truthfully say we are not glad vacation is near but we can say that it is with a feelings of profound regret that we see you depart from among us. We are aware of the fact that we have not always been the best pupils in the world but your loving smile and cheerfulness have always encouraged us and helped us over the rough spots. We ask you to accept this small token of appreciation and affection and when you go back on the farm to feed the calves and chickens we sincerely hope that prosperity and good luck will follow you wherever you go. Signed on behalf of your pupils of West Devon School, JEAN CULLETON, PEARLE MCNEILL

Mrs. McLennan made a fitting reply thanking the pupils and rate-payers of West Devon for their unvarying kindness during the past year. Felt hats have disappeared for the summer months in favor of the cooler straw and fabric models. But their influence remains, for both the straw and fabric are handled in the pliable manner of felt. In the present millinery mode, there is a definite one-sided feeling, and each hat is worn well off the head, with the brow and the hair at the sides showing.
