UNHURRIED LADY EXISTS NO MORE

"She makes such a job out of living," said one woman in explaining why another was always overworked and in a dither.

That's probably the biggest fault of the modern woman, isn't it? She glories in being pushed, in doing things the hard way, in rushing around.

Stop for a three-minute chat with the average woman and what do you see—an easy-going, unhurried, calm person who has time for a friendly interest in you and your doings?

No. That's not the usual picture. Usually, you see a woman with a strained look on her face that comes from hurrying, from trying to squeeze too many activities into every day, from making mountains out of molehills.

Give her three minutes and you hear how busy she is, how much trouble she is having doing this or getting that, what is wrong with her children, etc.

And she says it all with an air of personal triumph —as if there were something noble about having too much to do.

Proud Of It

That's the catch. The modern woman thinks there is some virtue in rushing around, in never "having a minute" for anything, in making out that keeping house and bringing up children is the hardest job in the world.

Doing things easily is no longer a virtue among women. If they can't hurry, complain, and fret, they are afraid the world won't give them credit for all they do.

They DO make a job out of living—even if they have to join five clubs to make their days hectic enough to complain about.
