FORMER C. N. R. EMPLOYEE BURIED AT WINNIPEG

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 20—The funeral of the late D. J. Leger, recently retired from the position of accountant, Canadian National Railways, Winnipeg, and formerly of Moncton, N.B., was held yesterday from his late residence to Sacred Heart Church, Winnipeg, and interment was made in St. Mary's Cemetery in that city.

His death, which was due to an acute heart attack, was quite sudden following a brief illness. Prior to his transfer to Winnipeg, the late Mr. Leger was employed by the Intercolonial and Canadian Government Railways at Moncton. He was in his 63th year and had completed forty eight years in railway service prior to his retirement.

Surviving are his widow, formerly Nora Bourque, to whom he was married in Moncton in 1901. four sons and four daughters. These being: Louis of Winnipeg; Alfred, of Wells, B. C.; Arthur of Saskatchewan; Raymond, at home; Evangeline, Helen, Yvonne, and Lucille, all at home; and three brothers, Peter, of Gibson's Landing, B. C.; Joseph and Solomon of Moncton.

Saving Effectuated in Refining Methods

The public debt to ingenuity and unceasing efforts of research engineers and men of science is nowhere better illustrated than in the story of gasoline. Today's automobile engine would be impossible if it had to run on the average yield of gasoline produced in 1910. In that year the average yield of gasoline from a barrel of crude oil was 1-2 gallons. Now the yield is 19 gallons, more than four times as much. In 1935, for instance, motorists of North America used between 18 and 19 billion gallons of gasoline and the refiners processed less than 975 million barrels of crude oil to get it. The best refining methods of 27 years ago could have produced from that crude oil not much more than 4 billion gallons—and that was all the gasoline there was in it.

To have furnished the additional 14 billion gallons of gasoline needed in 1935 by the refining methods of 1910 would have required nearly 3 billion barrels more crude. It has been supplied by such methods the quality of gasoline needed by the modern car would have been impossible.

That Body of Hours

By James W. Burton, M.D.

A FULL STOMACH AND A FAILING HEART

Some years ago a physician passing a factory at the noon hour noticed a larger number of men playing soccer (football). They had eaten their lunch, had settled down to a practice game and played for about a half hour.

Believing that these young men should be resting after the meal instead of playing which takes the blood away from the stomach and intestines down to the legs, he determined to make tests.

With some other physician after the game finished at 1 o'clock, he examined the stomach contents of the ones who had played and compared them with others who had sat down and rested during the noon hour.

These physicians found that digestion had gone along so fast, in fact faster than in those who had rested. Thinking that the ones who had played were perhaps better or stronger men physically it was decided to examine these players on days on which they did not play but rested. It was found that on the days on which they played, digestion was better or faster than when they rested.

Now this was a surprise to the investigators but served to prove that in young, healthy vigorous men, exercise—not too violent—forces the heart to beat faster and covers the body at a more rapid rate, including also the blood in the digestive system.

"However as we grow older the heart is not strong and elastic and can only do a certain amount of work, and eating a big meal taxes its strength to the extent that any exercise immediately after the meal actually puts a strain on the heart, and on the blood vessels.

"Thus Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Mayo Clinic, in American Journal of Digestive Diseases and Nutrition, reminds us that, after a meal, the blood flow more than doubles, not only in the blood vessels supplying the digestive system but also in all the blood vessels of the rest of the body. One can thus see why a man whose heart is ordinarily just strong enough to stand the extra strain of a short walk is not able to take this walk after meals when the load on the circulation has already been increased almost to the breaking point.

The thought then as we approach middle age or when there has been any strain on the heart from infection, is to rest, not work or play, immediately after a good-sized meal.
