CHARITY BALLS BANNED

VENICE, March 10.—Charity balls have come under the ban of Cardinal La Fontaine, Patriarch of Venice. In a public letter he wrote: "On such occasions misery becomes an excuse for people to appease their desire to dance by letting fall a little money which will be gathered by the poor. The Redeemer gave his life to save souls. But in the modern dance, one receives a germ which destroys the soul like lightning."

Immigration

graphic divisions of Canada with their barriers have proved an obstacle to the settlement of the country but the Laurentian Shield still continues to a certain extent to separate the East from the West in spite of roads and railways and newspapers and telegraph systems.

After the conquest of New France by the English the French population amounted to about 65,000, in 1778 this had increased to 90,000, and is now two and one half million. They had settled along the shore of the St. Lawrence and its tributaries; for a century every house in Canada could be seen from a canoe travelling on these waterways. The farms were in narrow strips along the edge of the river and these strips would become still narrower when divided up for the sons of the farmers. After the taking of Quebec most of the nobles and clericals left Canada and returned to France. This added to the difficulties of the English minority in controlling an alien population. The English settlers at this time were mostly demobilized soldiers and later the United Empire Loyalists arrived. They were given land in the fertile regions of Upper Canada and were assisted by the Home Government. A few necessary roads were built along which the colonists settled, much as the Romans had built strategic roads and settled their demobilized soldiers about 1600 years before in Britain. We learn from Senator Haydon's Pioneer sketches that from 100 to 800 acres were granted according to the rank of the soldier. They received free transport and pensions of from 6 pence to one shilling per day and regular rations for a year and utensils for farming or for their trade. They were induced to settle in groups by offers of special assistance, and a settlement was supplied with a carpenter, a schoolmaster and a clergyman. And so subsidized colonization was begun in Canada.

Commerce and industry developed and the population increased. There was a movement up into the Laurentian plateau following the lumbering camps, but agriculture could not succeed on these rocky highlands which were only suitable for grazing; it is depressing in travelling through these mountains to see here literally rural slums and there the ruins of deserted farms. It is only where the population is supported by mining that settlements prosper in these districts.

In the meantime the Maritimes were slowly opening up and being settled by colonists from England, Scotland and Ireland. United Empire Loyalists also came and were welcomed and given grants of land by the English Government.

As the population of Eastern Canada increased the fatal barrier of the Laurentian shield loomed on the western horizon and there began that tragic movement of Canadians across the southern border; Canada lost before the end of the nineteenth Century from one quarter to one third of her meagre population. They went at this time chiefly to the western States. Canada had no great staple then to hold her population and to supply money for development; the United States on the other hand, had cotton and tobacco the proceeds from which enabled her to build roads and railways and to develop the west. Because of the barrier of the Laurentians and the Prairies British Columbia was completely cut off from Eastern Canada and was first steered from the United States and might easily have been annexed to the United States.

Now we come to the days of the Giants when Canada had men of vision—such men as Van Horne, Donald Smith and John Macdonald. In Walter Vaughn's life of Sir William Van Horne is told the epic story of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a task involving gigantic effort with repeated, almost hopeless discouragements.

From London loans had to be raised and Donald Smith was literally begging for money there while at home Van Horne besieged Ottawa repeatedly, frantically demanding assistance, at a time when most people believed that the responsibilities of the new Canadian Government were already too onerous without endorsing such a wild scheme as building a railway across uninhabited prairies and what seemed to be impassible mountains. Those men played for high stakes, but the high stakes were Canada and her future; they played against men of fear and short vision, and they won a continent that was in a few short years the Premier Dominion of the Great Commonwealth of Nations, as General Smuts called Canada in speaking in Ottawa a short time ago. There he spoke of us as "the Dominion that has taken the lead in all the great developments of freedom or of constitutional reform that we have seen in our day in our great Commonwealth." The Canadian Pacific Rail-way did more than connect British

Movietone Follies Great Production

Revealing possibilities of the new talking picture medium hitherto undreamed of, the William Fox Movietone Follies of 1929 received the warmest of receptions from a capacity audience at its debut at the Prince Edward Theatre last night. This production, which has been talked about for months and which has aroused more curiosity in the motion picture world than any previous all-talking performance, is all and more than has been claimed for it.

It presents for the first time on a motion picture screen a gigantic musical revue, constituting the first challenge of Hollywood to Broadway's supremacy.

There are eleven elaborately staged numbers in addition to a "backstage" story, skilfully interwoven, which keeps interest at the boiling point and provides the best opportunity to date that inimitable comedian, Stephen Fectich, has had to display his talent.

Several song numbers already have been heard over the radio, and undoubtedly will become popular hits throughout the country. They include "That's You, Baby," "The Breakaway," "Walking With Susie," "Big City Blues" and "Pearl of Old Japan."

A staggering array of principals includes Sue Carol, Lola Lane, Sharon Lynn, Dixie Lee, David Rollins, John Breeden, Stepin Pichit, David Percy and Frank Richardson. Con Conrad, Sydney D. Mitchell and Archie Gottler, celebrated song writers, are responsible for the words and music.

A news weekly and a screamingly funny talking comedy round out this excellent opening bill.

NEW FRIGIDAIRE HYDRATOR

Use of the recently introduced Frigidaire Hydrator to preserve the crisp freshness of leafy vegetables and similar foods for long periods of time has proved such a popular subject with housewives everywhere, that R. T. Holman, Limited, local dealer, has arranged a special 9 day demonstration at the local showroom, beginning Thursday, March 13 and ending March 22.

"Since the announcement of the new hydrator, we have received scores of visitors who wanted this new development in the field of household refrigeration explained," he said. "Information that the hydrator is an important aid in the preparation of tasty, fresh salads of all kinds has aroused such general interest that this special demonstration has been decided upon."

The demonstration will be held daily from 8 A. M. to 5.30 P. M. Salads will be prepared from vegetables which have been freshened in the hydrator. Desserts, frozen with the aid of the famous Frigidaire cold control, will be served to visitors. Many other features have been arranged for the demonstration, it was announced.

GYPSY'S ADVICE LEADS TO PATRICIDE

(British United Press) SZOLNOK, Hungary, March 10.—Superstitious faith in the wisdom of a gypsy fortune-teller has caused a weird crime in this district. On the advice of the gypsy, the police report, Emmerich Csorba, a peasant bound his father and opened an artery in the old man's arm. He then bathed himself in his father's blood "so that he might become stronger and more handsome."

Alarmed by a neighbour who discovered the old man's body when he visited the home soon afterwards, the police found Csorba sleeping peacefully in his bed.

"No man or woman should hobble painfully about because of corns when so certain a relief is at hand as Holloway's Corn Remover.

Needless Pain! Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. Lots of suffering is, indeed, quite needless. Headaches, for example. They come without warning, but one can always be prepared. Aspirin tablets bring prompt relief. Keep a bottle of them at the office. Carry the small tin in your pocket. Then you won't have to hunt a druggist, or wait till you get home. And do not think that Aspirin is only good for headaches, sore throats, and colds. Read the proven directions for relieving neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatic, and other aches and pains. Remembering, of course, that the quick comfort from these tablets is not a cure for any continued pain, see a doctor. Purchase genuine Aspirin. Protect yourself by looking for that name. Always the same. Always safe. Never hurts the heart. BAYER ASPIRIN TRADE MARK REG.
