After Ten Years

HUMPHREY

Chapter 3

Millie ran home through the rain as fast as she could. She tried to hold the umbrella up with one hand. And with the other thrust through the slit pocket of her rain coat, to catch up her skirt within the protection of her coat.

She only made matters worse, as she was bound to in such a contest with a dead-in-earnest Spring rain. The umbrella wobbled from side to side, letting rain down the neck of the coat, and the skirt, relic of a day when Scotch plaids were laid appropriately in pleats and kilts.

So when she reached her front door, she was out of breath, cross cold and wet. She had none of the exhilaration that a run through a rainstorm should have given her; she had narrowed her chest and really tried not to breathe.

Humphrey was sitting just as she knew he would be, feet thrust into red felt slippers.

He was reading just as she knew he would be, the latest copy of "Stacy Smith," on which ever magazine of short stories, trying to seem naughty, was out on the railroad newsstand that day.

"Hello. Where were you been all the time?" And neither waiting for nor expecting any answer, he went on with his story:

"But Polly had not danced behind the footlights three years without learning a thing or two about men. She helped herself to some more lobster and asked, 'What line of talk are you pulling, dearie. If you think I'm going to give up my profession for any mere little Harlem flat you're all to the wrong, dearie, all to the wrong.'

"I've been over to Cora's," Millie's voice came vaguely into his ears. She says the Baptists want a new steppie on the...

"But if you offer me a yacht and a house on the Drive, now, you'll be talking, Maurice beamed with delight and moving around her waist. The Japanese butler discreetly retired...

"—wants the well, but she's having a baby too. It's the tenth I'm sure, and only three of them lived, though she ought to be thankful for that—raincoat, overshoes, and wet slippers and her stocking feet.

"Undisturbed by the disappearance of the butler, Polly went on with her supper. Dancing always gave her a ravenous appetite and lobster was her favorite dish. When Maurice tried to kiss her she insisted upon more champagne. After a time her host tired of this being played with—

"Well, you might answer once, anyway, when I talk to you."

"Huh? I'm sorry, I was just in the exciting part—what did you say?"

"That Mrs. Perkins might be just as 'lad seven of them died, since he's no good and leaves her all the time to earn her own living. Maud wanted her in to cook while her sister's having a baby—

Humphrey, whose mind was still at the champagne and lobster supper in the bachelor apartment with chorus girls and Japanese butlers and private yachts strewn all over the park, had a jumbled idea that Maud had had and lost seven children and was about to indulge in another, with her sister mixed up in it although how could this be when Maud was in a village spinster and at least 40 years old?

And he made some unfortunate remark that showed how vaguely this gossip had penetrated his head, which brought down the wrath of Millie. She stamped, upsetting more noise in her stocking feet than she did when she wore shoes.

"Humphrey, contrite at having been rude, actually forgot the lobsters and the short skirted heroine of the story. He thought of going upstairs and apologizing, but he was much too warm and comfortable in the big arm chair to move.

So he settled down again thinking consolingly that if she was mad it wouldn't last. He looked so settled he seemed to have fairly grown into the chair. He was that sort of man. In a stiff wooden chair, he would have looked out of place, but his own soft body fairly settled and became a part of padding and cushions.

Humphrey had the habit of fat of him who over eat and under-exercises, and the round face that goes with a bland temperament. He picked up the story. Nothing improper ever happened in any of them, experience should have taught him that, but he was always happy.

Tomorrow—Disagreement

OH!

"How old are you, Buddy?"

"Six years."

"And what are you thinking of becoming?"

"Seven years."

France Big Day At Conference

MONCTON, Nov. 21—Tomorrow will be France's great day at the Continental Hall. It will mark the opening discussion upon the question of land armaments, a phase of the conference on Limitation of Armaments which is of paramount importance to France. Tonight everything is in readiness for the third plenary session, the conference session which it is believed will be devoted exclusively to Premier Briand's declaration of his country's position in regards to military requirements.

May Postpone Further Payments

BERLIN, Nov. 21—The future instalments of German reparations may be postponed after those due in January and February are paid, if the Allies are convinced of Germany's sincerity. It was intimated semi-officially yesterday, after a final conference between chancellor Wirth and the members of the Reparations Commission.

OWED MUCH TO STEREOSCOPE

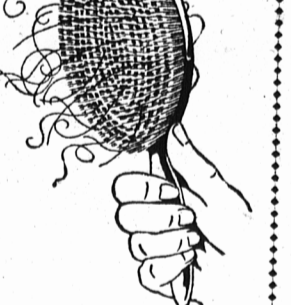

The old-fashioned stereoscope played an important part in the world war. It supplied an angle to photographs, snapped from airplanes, that could not be obtained before its use. The pictures all seemed flat, but the stereoscope added height and thus steep slopes, that appeared in pictures like flat ground were shown in their true characteristics, and the lives of men who would have to cover the ground in attack were saved. The airplane camera looks directly down on the spot to be photographed, making a picture as a one-eyed man would see it. A stereoscopic camera, in which the lenses are two and three-quarters inches apart, would not produce the stereoscopic effect. Photographers decided to take pictures 100 yards apart to give a view, just as a giant, with eyes 100 yards apart, would see it. These pictures were put on cardboard and viewed through the stereoscope. At first a cottage looked like a tower, a bucket like a well, a trench like a canyon. The officers soon learned to translate these eccentricities and the problem was solved. True pictures, giving just the exact information desired, were then obtained by the airplane photographers.

POSTIES' BOOKS OF STAMPS ARE POPULAR WITH PUBLIC.—Apparently the citizens of Toronto, especially in the outlying districts, are taking kindly to the innovation introduced on Tuesday by the postal authorities, by which twenty-five cent books of stamps may be purchased from the postmen delivering mail on the various routes.

Postmaster W. E. Lemon stated yesterday that the new arrangement was "going very nicely," and that the reports for the first day sales indicated that the public were availing themselves freely of the new convenience provided. Mr. Lemon believed that the arrangement was a real convenience to the postal patrons throughout the city, and that it would become still more so, as the citizens grew more acquainted with the provision made. Ald. Donald MacGregor made the suggestion which led to this step being taken.

A Battery that has been in use a full season or longer has given a large part of the service it was designed to give. As a precaution against trouble next season, we recommend DRY STORAGE for the winter months. Your battery will be taken down, thoroughly cleaned and treated, carefully stored, and in the spring re-assembled with new separators, fresh acid re-charged. Such a thorough going over as this insures that your battery will be in perfect shape for next season's work. The cost is very little more than for wet storage, and will save several times the extra cost in avoiding loss of time and repair bills next summer. Come "Where Service Reigns" and talk it over.
