

Had a Severe Cold Coughed Incessantly

Mrs. C. Fehrman, Selkirk, Ont. writes: "Last winter I suffered from a very severe cold. I coughed incessantly which irritated the glands and caused sore throat."

"I tried several medicines without any luck, but one day I picked up your almanac and read about

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. "I got a bottle and after taking a couple of doses felt much relieved and when I had finished it my cold had simply disappeared."

MISS BROWN OF X. Y. O.

By E. Philipps Oppenheim (Copyright 1927 by E. Philipps Oppenheim)

Miss Brown shook her head in some embarrassment. "Frances, dear," she confided, "I don't think I want to go. I can't tell you why, but there's really a reason."

"No, I suppose my black frock would do." "Then you'll have to come, and that's all there is about it. I think the Princess wants you to do some work for her."

Miss Brown reflected. She had had visions since her conversation with Paul of being abducted, of being tied hands and feet to her chair while bearded monsters and phlegmatic torches to induce her to part with what she remembered of the contents of her precious notebook. And yet she wasn't actually afraid. She knew very well how ridiculous any idea of the sort really was, and she had triumphed, and she laughed softly to herself.

"If you want me to go very much, Frances," she said, "why, of course it might be fun. Do you mind dining with me at a little place I know of first and of them? Come! We'll go round to the Ritz grill room."

"It's raining," Miss Brown ventured. "We'll get wet if necessary, Frances declared, swinging herself off her bed and grabbing her hat. If you say another word I shall drink two cocktails—or even three. Put on your nice drab little mackintosh and your shiny hat, and come along."

"I'm not sure that I approve of the splashing and wandering out in search of cocktails," Miss Brown remarked, as they started off. "Frances shook out her umbrellas. 'Where shall we go?' she asked. 'Hatchard's or the Ritz?'"

Miss Brown deliberated for a moment and decided in favor of the larger measure of respectability. "And There Was Frankland!"

The only occupant of the Ritz grill-room lounge when the girls made their tentative entrance was Noel Frankland, lounging ungracefully in an easy chair, with two empty glasses upon the table by his side and a third one-half full in his hand. He rose to his feet at once and came forward to greet Frances, but he was obviously embarrassed.

"Who's that you're doing here tonight?" he demanded. "Who's feeding the chickens?" "The chickens are all right," Frances answered, a little coldly. "I thought you were speaking of Leeds."

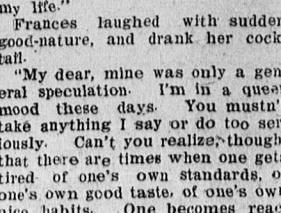

"You got it wrong," was the hurried reply. "That's tomorrow night—I mean the night after I am having an early dinner here, and going to the theatre afterward," he added, with a nervous glance over his shoulder.

"With your wife?" "With the missus. Good thing I told you about her, wasn't it? Look here, what are you doing afterward—tomorrow afternoon? Why can't you wander down and see me about them?" he suggested, lowering his voice as he bent toward Frances.

"I don't think I want to see your show, as you call it," Frances replied. "At the present moment we are dining for a cocktail. Come along, Edith. We'll sit in the corner there."

Turn Hair Dark With Sage Tea

By JEAN MACON

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is one of the greatest advantages.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product for only 75 cents. Improved by the addition of other ingredients called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb with this through brush with it and done.

By morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair, it produces a few applications, it produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

Paul came eagerly forward to meet them as soon as the two girls entered the restaurant. His first quick smile of gratitude was flashed toward Miss Brown, but it was Frances with whom he walked to a corner table.

"It is good of you to come here," he said. "I have been hoping so much to see you again. It is a small place, but I feel that only a small place would do. We shall serve you gladly, however."

"I am sure it will be very nice," Frances replied. "Edith loves coming here."

"Miss Brown has been very kind. It is always a pleasure to see her. I hope you will like what we have this evening," Paul went on, presenting the menu. "There is plenty of stewed chicken but I am afraid the fish is nearly all finished. We have some excellent sardines and anchovies, though."

"Just what you have, please," Miss Brown begged, "and half a bottle of the vin rose."

Paul hurried away to arrange for their meal. Frances looked after him curiously. "A most attractive young man," she murmured, "if only we could get over the idea of his being a waiter."

"He is a gentleman playing the part of a waiter," Miss Brown corrected. "I admire him for it very much. He is trying to help his father and mother and sister."

"Frances lit a cigarette and looked at Paul in a favor of the larger measure of respectability. "That is the sister talking to her," Miss Brown pointed out. "I don't see the girl, but she is generally marauding with an old friend about the conduct of the war."
