NATURALLY CROSS-GRAINED
"No, I don't think Mr. Wood cutivates irritability. 'Think he's just naturally cross-grained, eh?"

"These Women"
BY MALCOLM DUART

A young, fair girl ran forward, and kissed him, her arm tight around his neck. "I'm so glad you came," she cried. "I was so lonesome I wanted to cry since ten o'clock."

Morton stood with his arm around her waist, looking anxiously at her tired face.

"It's two o'clock now," he said. "You're used up. Then he chuckled. "It's a good thing this is a sound-proof apartment—I'd have had to get you out of jail for playing that organ."

He led her to a chair, and seated her in it with grave ceremony. Then he brought a footstool and sat upon it. She drew his head to the padded arm of the chair, and caressed his temples with her slim fingers. He reached up and took her hand, drawing it over his shoulder.

"Something's worrying you, Audrey," he said. "What is it?"

The girl reached over with her other hand, and laid it on his forehead.

"Almost everything's worrying me," she confessed. "I hate to have you go out nights, when we're here in the city, and I don't spend too much money on me, and I don't feel as if I was one bit of good in the world. Maybe I'd feel differently if I were your really truly daughter, but I'm not. And that's that."

Morton twisted his head so he could look at her. "The way was a quizzical light in his eyes. "Women love trouble," he quoted. "And if they haven't any they go out and make some for themselves!"

Audrey paid this the tribute of a fleeting smile, but her eyes were serious.

"How much money do you make every year?" she asked, impulsively.

"Oh, about a hundred thousand dollars," he answered. "Why?"

The girl slipped from her chair to the floor, and nestled up against him.

"Do you know," she asked, soberly, "that I wish you didn't have one penny except what you could earn with your own hands, every week, and that I could keep house for you on that, and cook your meals, and mend your clothes, and telephone you, and everything. Some woman has been calling up here almost every hour, all evening."

Morton chuckled. "So you don't think they love me for myself alone?"

The girl took his hand and smoothed it between her own. "Maybe they love you—maybe they can't help it. But if you didn't have so much money you couldn't take them out places. You'd have to work, and you'd be tired at night, and would come home to me."

Morton made a little crooning noise in his throat, as one makes to a troubled child. Arising, he stooped and picked the girl up in his arms. Carefully he mounted the steps to the second story of the duplex apartment, and set her down at the door of her own boudoir.

"I do work, truly," he said, gravely. "Just because I work at a desk is no sign that I don't do hard work. But I never knew that the company of an old man like me would be missed by my pretty little kitten."

As the other girl had done, an hour before, Audrey held him by the shoulders.

"You're NOT old!" she protested. "You won't be old for years and years, and I'd rather be with you than with anybody else."

She slipped her two forefingers into his vest pockets, and stood a moment, her eyes cast to the floor. "Why didn't you ever get married?" she resumed. "Didn't you ever want to get married? Didn't you ever see anyone you wanted to marry?"

Morton's face contracted for a moment, as if at a painful thought, but in a moment he was smiling again.

"Well, I've thought about it sometimes. Have YOU?"

He tilted her head, a crooked grin beneath her chin, and looked a moment into her eyes. She turned her head away. Then, standing on tiptoe, she bestowed a swift kiss upon his cheek, and fled into her room.

"Goodnight," she called from behind the closed door.

Thoughtfully Morton descended the stairs, and sank into the big leather chair which always awaited him in the living room. At three o'clock, he still was sitting there, thinking.

For fifteen years, Harry Morton—and the girl Audrey—had interested the people of Toronto.

When Morton first appeared there, early in the year 1910, with a little blue-eyed, four-year-old girl holding tightly to his hand, he went directly to his hotel, and engaged a suite of rooms—two bedrooms, and a sitting room.

Almost at once he opened an office with the sign: "Harry B. Morton, Broker," on the door.

Just what form of property he dealt in, his neighbors in the building were not sure. What attracted their attention, and that of the folk in the lobby of the hotel, was that presently he appeared at the wheel of the largest and showiest automobile in town. In this, on Sunday mornings, and often of a week-day afternoon, he and the little Audrey would speed away for long rides over the country.

Address And Presentation

On Thursday evening, April 8th, 1926, the board of directors and the manager of the Wiltshire Dairying Co., with their wives and a number of the neighbors, met at the home of Mr. Ewen Campbell to spend a few pleasant hours with him on his retirement from the office of secretary of the company.

Mr. Donald McPherson was appointed chairman, who addressed the meeting in his usual pleasing manner and explained the object of this friendly gathering. He then called upon the President, Mr. Edwin Edwards, to read the address, after which Mr. Edgar Easter, on behalf of the directors, presented Mr. Campbell with a beautiful gold headed cane, with his name engraved on it.

Mr. Campbell was agreeably surprised on entering his home to find so many of his friends present. He thanked the board of directors for their kind and complimentary address and for their valuable gift. He regretted the necessity of retiring from the office of secretary of the Wiltshire Dairying Co., which he had held so long for it was a pleasure to serve under a board that was so progressive and agreeable—a board, who on account of their successful management of the business of the Company were re-elected en bloc at the last two annual meetings in Toronto.

The cold storage department just completed by Messrs. McLean and Pollard was a necessity. It will add materially to the value of the whole plant. Under the present board of directors with Messrs. Noy and Lane in charge of the factory, the success of the business is certain.

He was glad that Mr. Roland Easter had been appointed his successor. The books and monies of the company will be safe in his hands.

At short speeches were made by the directors, after which the young people favored the meeting with vocal and instrumental music. The ladies then took charge and served refreshments to the delight of all present.

The meeting closed with singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Following is the address: Mr. Ewen Campbell, North Wiltshire, P. E. Island.

Respected Sir,—It is with great regret we recently parted with you, and I am sure that owing to the necessity of relinquishing the office of secretary of the Wiltshire Dairying Association. For more than twenty years you most faithfully and efficiently acted as secretary and salesman of our cheese factory, and at all times taking a very keen interest in everything calculated to be helpful to the company. At each annual meeting you gave a clear and concise statement of the business done during the preceding year, and by always making absolutely accurate returns to each patron, you won the entire confidence of all who were in any way connected with the factory. In fact, she heard Morton say: "Now you explain what you're doing in my house." (To be continued)

Flies and mosquitoes love campers

WHY allow these aggravating, filthy pests to ruin your outings? In camp or at home Flit will free you from the nuisance.

Flit spray clears your home in a few minutes of disease-bearing flies and mosquitoes. It is clean, safe and easy to use.

SHE OUGHTA KNOW

A young fellow whose name was Eugene, Tried hard for his college track team.

The coach answered no, "You're so awfully slow, That's not true said the fellow's young queen."

When he bought a house, it was notable, not for its size, but for the number of servants that he installed in it. This was two years after his appearance in Toronto. By the time he had returned to a home equipped with two servants had a bit of grandeur about it. Morton engaged four for his house in the outskirts—a cook, a chauffeur, a housemaid, and a personal maid for the little girl.

Naturally, there was talk; a good deal of it.

Just as naturally, much of the talk was unfriendly.

Folk in Toronto are just as apt to be suspicious of things and theories and people that they do not understand, as are the people on Main Street and in New York, and the remainder of the globe.

Nobody understood Morton. He continued his business, in his modest brokerage office, but Toronto never found out exactly what that business was. Once a fortnight, and sometimes once a week, he would journey to New York. Why he went, the most diligent searchers after truth were unable to learn. They knew he maintained an expensive apartment there, as well as his home in Toronto.

Evidently he had big means, even with a little deference. Occasionally he dabbled a bit in local real estate. His motor cars were of the finest; the appointments of his house were rich; the little girl Audrey always was dressed in fashions that came from Paris.

The gossiping crowd agreed, that Morton was a bachelor; that the little girl was his adopted child; that he was close-mouthed about his past, and about his present, to a most astounding degree, and that he was the most attractive figure among all the males of Toronto.

Further than that, there was no agreement at all. Morton himself took no pains to remove any of their doubts. Indifferent to the talk about him in the town, he went his own way, addressing compliments to such women as he knew, offering gay companionship and hospitality to the men of his circle, giving generously to the poor of the surrounding environs.

Thus it came about, in course of time, that the readiness to work for him in Toronto disappeared. The curiosity, however, remained.

On the day when he and Audrey returned from New York a little crowd was gathered at the station to greet an incoming celebrity.

Morton smiled as he noted that he aroused as lively an interest as the arriving notable. He waved a greeting to the crowd, and Audrey smiled and nodded, as they entered their automobile.

"You're a regular prima-donna yourself," she said to him.

He laughed. "Some of these people are simply going to explode, some day, over the mystery of my visits to New York."

"Why don't you tell them?" she asked.

"Why should I?" he countered.

A neat housemaid opened the door of her home, and dropped a courtesy. She had come not long before from England, and held to the manners of the English household where she had been bred.

"Gentleman waiting to see you, sir," she said.

Morton stepped into the study that led off the reception hall.

A man was sitting in an arm chair, beside the open fire. His head was sunk deep between his hunched shoulders, and his chin was on his breast. Audrey, looking over Morton's shoulder, saw him to be roughly dressed, and unprepossessing the extreme, as Morton pulled upon the sliding door. As the door closed, she saw that the man had not risen to his feet.

Acids in Stomach Cause Indigestion

Create Gas, Sourness and Pain How to Treat

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as some believe to lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food is not causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestants are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any druggist a few ounces of Bismarck Magnesia and take it as directed. It is a natural, safe, and effective remedy. Is Your Rheumatism Acute Or Chronic?

In either case you'll get quick results from good "Nerviline" which has five times the pain destroying power of ordinary remedies. Nerviline gives results because it penetrates to the source of the pain, because it contains ingredients that destroy rheumatic pains. It is the unusually bad case that proves the power of Nerviline. Suffered for young and old; used internally and externally for many purposes, 35c at all dealers.

brings real music into your home as does the Orthophonic Victrola

THE Orthophonic Victrola is a new musical discovery, exclusive to the Victor Company,—an instrument of entirely new internal design.

If there had been an easier way to bring Orthophonic musical beauty into the home,—meaning the real music,—Victrola would have chosen it.

But there wasn't—and there isn't!

Great artists, famous bands, renowned orchestras,—singers, players and entertainers of every kind can now cheer you at home with the tone range of the music complete from piping treble to booming bass.

Complete—only by virtue of the Orthophonic principle.

A demonstration,—at any "His Master's Voice" dealer is a revelation.
