CHAPTER 69
HER LAST DAY OF GRACE

At the door of the theater, Lila, and Herbert met Jack Farquhar, face to face. Lila held her breath. Her gaze sought Farquhar's beseechingly. His eyes were dark and inscrutable. Not a muscle of his face moved.

He passed on without a sign of recognition. Lila understood. He would keep his promise, if she kept hers. She and Herbert went to a night club for supper. They arrived home late, but the hour made no difference to Lila. She couldn't sleep. For the rest of the night she sat by the window and stared out over the sleeping city. She heard the first rattle of the milk-wagons; she saw the eastern sky grow light with the first touch of dawn.

Her day—her last day—was at hand! She would make her confession to Herbert after breakfast. That would forestall Farquhar, to whom she was to telephone at eleven o'clock. Farquhar, of course, expected that call to tell him at what hour he was to fetch her for their marriage. The message he would actually receive would be a bolt from the blue.

Lila could hear herself faltering: "Jack, I've something to tell you. I can't marry you. I was married to Herbert Ware—after you were reported dead."

Her plan, however, went astray. Herbert, evidently believing that she would wish to sleep late, went down-town without disturbing her. So when Lila descended to the breakfast-room, there was only Herbert's vacant place to greet her.

That meant, of course, that Farquhar would see Herbert before she could reach him. Never, never could she go to his office to make her confession. She thought of summoning him home on a pretext of illness.

Sidons brought her iced melon. "The last breakfast of the condemned!" she thought. Then, quite suddenly, the inspiration for a respite came to her. She hurried to the telephone and rang Farquhar, who answered rather shortly for an about-to-be bridegroom.

"Jack," she said breathlessly, "will you grant me one last favor?" "What is it?" he demanded suspiciously. "Will you—will you consent to—having the ceremony performed out of town? You see, Dad—well, it's a hole doing in my dress! It appeared in all the papers without warning."

She held her breath while he considered. "All right," he agreed, to her relief and surprise. "It just happens to work in with my own preference. I had it up last night that there's a horse running at Saratoga tomorrow that's sure to clean up. A little windfall wouldn't do my finances any harm. What do you say to going to Saratoga for our marriage and a honeymoon?"

"He gasped," "that would—would be splendid. But we'd have to go separately. Jack, it wouldn't look well otherwise." He laughed dryly. "You have your moments when you're extraordinarily keen about the conventions, haven't you, Lila? But I'll agree. I'll leave today and make arrangements about a license—it may take time—and hotel accommodations are bound to be difficult during the racing season. But no fooling, Lila! It's your last chance, and I won't stand for any more nonsense."

"Yes," Jack, she promised feverishly. She was reflecting that this respite would give her the opportunity to have a few hours with Herbert before making her confession. The next day Farquhar would receive a special delivery letter telling him the truth at last!

She said good-by to Farquhar shakily. "You don't sound like a happy bridegroom." "I don't feel very much like one!" was the grim reply. "This whole funny business has got my goat. But I'm through with it now, if it kills me."

Lila rang up Dorothy and told her the latest development. "I shall spend the day at home, and this evening—oh, Dot!" Her sob broke through the phone. "Her sob!" May Varney called her. Her voice was sharp and bitter. "Lila, I've stood this as long as I can. Protecting you from the consequences of some wretched affair in France is losing me my husband. You've got to tell the truth to him. Give me 'til tomorrow, May." Implored Lila. "Then I'll have confessed everything!"

"May laughed shortly. 'You've been promising me that for weeks. I tell you, Jack Varney is on the war-path. I can't wait another day. If you won't clear me, I swear I'll go to Herbert this very afternoon with the truth and make him explain to Jack.' "One more day, May!" "No!" May hung up the receiver.

The dance held last evening at the Parochial Hall, as a part of the Hospital Benefit was largely attended, many people from Sackville, Moncton, Springhill, Oxford and Parrabore coming to Amherst for this notable event. The floor was crowded throughout the evening. The music furnished by the Charlottetown Orchestra was greatly appreciated, and the visiting musicians at the conclusion of the performance received many compliments. The visitors from Charlottetown, who in a warm-hearted Island manner sponsored the benefit concert and dance were delighted with the reception given them by the use of at seeing such clean, sanitary people of Amherst.—Amherst News, rooms, equipped with everything for with a vicious bang. Even while Lila sat staring at her own telephone, its bell tinkled again. She answered it apathetically, thinking: "What fresh trouble can this be?" Herbert's voice came over the wire. It sounds jubilant. "Lila, darling, get ready for a little trip. I've a surprise for you—I'll explain later. But be ready to catch a three o'clock train."

"Where are we going?" she queried breathlessly. "Saratoga!" (To Be Continued.)

Charlottetown Artists Give Pleasure

Undoubtedly one of the most satisfying entertainments ever heard in Amherst, full of variety and pleasing all tastes, was that given in the Empress Theatre last evening by the Charlottetown Artists.

The program was well under way did anyone realize how great that debt would be to W. A. Filmore, president of the Hospital Board, tried to express it in fitting words; but even with his facility along this line he failed to do the obligation justice. Everyone was pleased, and today the universal question in Amherst is, were you at the concert last night? Every number on the program was given with a concert, not as a matter of courtesy, but because its high quality merited it. In some cases there were two or three recalls. The orchestra itself deserves a generous tribute, for it is not of small organization of this kind with such excellence in every part. Mr. Ben Wagner, its director, is a genius not only on the violin, which he handles with remarkable effect, but in giving spirit and finish to every performance. The various numbers by the orchestra had something in them to appeal to all, and this was particularly true in the overture with Irish Airs. One could say a lot about this orchestra and still not exhaust the wonderful quality of its harmony and the fine blending of all its parts. Mr. Wagner also furnished violin solos in each part of the program and revealed his fine taste in classical interpretation.

In sharing with the orchestra in popular approval was the male trio composed of Messrs. Dingwell, Sterns and Quigley. This trio was on the program for two selections, but the audience was not satisfied with this limited number and there were repeated demands for more.

There were a few fine blending in these splendid voices and there is a very pleasing effect without anyone straining after effect. The program would not have been complete without these numbers.

In the solo line Miss Barbara McNeil, Mr. Robert Messervy and Mrs. Miss Clara Graham, shared equally in the demand for their applause. Miss McNeil has a coloratura voice, with wide range and beautiful tone, and she sings with dramatic effect. She also gave a recitation which was as pleasing in its line, and revealing the same dramatic talent, as in her singing. She is not affected by her good looks, and she made a very charming impression upon the audience.

Mr. Messervy is one of the finest singers we have heard in Amherst in recent years. His voice had been trained in Germany and other singing centers, and is capable of expressing any emotion or sentiment whatever. His demand for his uses it with ease, and the many demands made on him last evening only revealed its range and capacity to better advantage. Charlottetown must consider itself favored with the possession of such an agnostic artist as this. Miss Graham sang two numbers in her usual pleasing manner—perhaps more pleasing than usual—and had to respond to calls for more. Our people have missed this charming voice during the past two months and we are glad that Miss Graham is home once again.

Other effective musical work was that of Mr. Fred Morris who showed himself a master of the piano in two numbers, and whose ease was equal to the dignity and the finish of his playing. Miss Roberta Spencer of Charlottetown, the accompanist for many of the numbers, deserves a generous word of praise for the character of her performance in this respect. Miss Graham also was accompanist for some of the numbers, and did her work excellently, and Mrs. D. W. Fraser, of Amherst showed the usual fine quality of her work in her accompaniment for Miss Graham. The other number on the program was a recital by Mr. Melanson, who revealed his histrionic ability in several sketches, and who greatly pleased the audience as was judged by the applause.

Taking it as a whole it was a finished performance and the people of Charlottetown are to be congratulated if they have such programs as a regular affair. The attendance was very large and the Ladies Hospital Aid will have a substantial balance for their work after all the expenses are paid.

Love's Revenge (British United Press.) LONDON, Sept. 22.—An amazing story of a rejected lover's revenge comes from Benterode, near Cassel. Frau Flick, an elderly and respectable widow, managed with success her late husband's farm. Among her employees was a youth of eighteen, who thought he saw a chance of establishing himself in a comfortable position for life. He would marry that elderly and respectable widow and become master of the farm. Alexander Zoubkov has married a Royal Princess, also an elderly and respectable widow, why then, should he not succeed?

He was a good-looking fellow, but he lacked Mr. Zoubkov's charm and magnetism, and the Russian's tragic background of revolution and exile. He had not the experience to insinuate himself into the widow's affection, and his plan of campaign was more likely to lead to success with the dairymaids than with the dignified proprietress of the farm.

His courtship was short. One day, to the horror of the widow, he put his arm around her waist and tried to kiss her. She dismissed him on the spot. He was very angry. His castle in the air had vanished and he determined to avenge himself. He was in such a fury that he declared he would ruin Frau Flick, and did not conceal his desire to harm her from the villagers. Frau Flick was liked and respected, so the villagers arranged among themselves to keep a watch on her farm and to guard her from the disappointed suitor. He was too sharp for them, for he set fire to a barn in which the corn from the harvest fields had been garnered. The building was soon a sheet of flame, and a high wind carried the fire to stables and cow-sheds and to the farm-house. A number of pigs and large quantities of corn and hay were burnt, buildings destroyed, and the house badly damaged. Worst of all, the widow was severely injured by a falling beam.

In the confusion the creator of the disaster managed to slip away, and he has not yet been found by the police.

Would you expect a SPUR to SOOTHE?

SPURS soothe nothing. Yet many goad their nerves into wracking action—lash nerves into sleeplessness—whip-up nerves into headaches and irritability through tannin and caffeine, two drug-spurs found in certain mealtime beverages. Cut by the spur, a horse fights back. Lashed by the drug-spurs, tannin and caffeine, nerves fight back. Nerves jangle and jar under daily punishment until eventually—the crash! Tannin and caffeine are harmful. With you these agents may work fast or slow. But, sooner or later, their poisonous effects are certain, sure!

Drink Postum. This rich, appetizing hot drink cannot whip-up your nerves because it contains not a single trace of any drug-stimulant. Splendid as a wholesome family beverage served three times daily. Instantly made in the cup, at a cost of about half a cent. There's Postum Cereal, too, made by boiling or percolating twenty minutes. At all grocers, restaurants, your club or on the train. Read Carrie Blanchard's generous free offer. Send the coupon now.

You know how many children do not like the taste of milk. You know how they like to have the same drink as the "grown-ups." You know, too, how good it is for them to have a hot drink! Make Instant Postum for them, using hot milk (not boiled) instead of boiling water! They'll like the taste immediately! And they'll get the added nourishment of milk in a hot drink that is economical and so easy to make.
