CHASE AND SANBORN, - MONTREAL

WHY IS THE SEA SALT?

Sea water contains about three and a half per cent. of sodium chloride and other salts. The evaporation of all the oceans would leave a mass of salt sufficient to cover the entire globe to the depth of two hundred feet, and equal to the bulk, above sea level, of one-fourth that of the whole earth.

The theory that this enormous quantity of salt has been dissolved from continental rocks, and carried down to the sea by streams, is not tenable, because the salt found in solution in river water contains eighty per cent. of carbonate of lime and only seven per cent. of chlorides, while common salt or sodium chloride constitutes eighty-nine per cent. of the salts of sea water. Then the evaporation of inland seas, which has taken place in Central Asia, has left saline deposits very different in composition from the salts of the ocean.

SCIENCE AND TRUTH.

There may be a wide divergence between scientific and actual truth. This forms the subject of an article by G. K. Chesterton in "The Daily News."

Some years ago a poet of considerable genius tragically disappeared, and the authorities of the newspapers circulated a photograph of him, so that he might be identified. The photograph, as I remember it, depicted or suggested a handsome, laughing, and somewhat puffed man, with his head thrown back, with long, distinguished features, colorless hair, and slight moustache, and, though conveyed merely by the head and shoulders, a definite impression of height. If I had gone by that photograph, I should have gone about looking for a large, soldierly but less man, with a profile rather like the Duke of Connaught's. Only, as it happened, I knew the poet personally; I had seen him a great many times, and he had an appearance that nobody could possibly forget, if seen only once. He had the mark of those dark and passionate Westland Scotch, who, before Burns and after, have given many such dark eyes and dark emotions to the world. But in him the unmistakable strain, Gaelic or whatever it was, was accentuated almost to a ludicrous degree. He had three black tufts, two on the upper lip and one under the lower, seemed to touch up the face with the fierce moustaches of Mephistopheles. His eyes had that "dancing madness" in them which Stevenson saw in the Gaelic eyes of Alan Breck, but he sometimes distorted the expression by screwing a monstrous monocle into one of them. A man more unmistakable would have been hard to find. You could have picked him out in any crowd—so long as you had not seen his photograph.

After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.
