FAILED TO CROSS THE ATLANTIC.

Walter Wellman in his dirigible balloon America has failed in his attempt to cross over the Atlantic, as he had before failed in his effort to reach the North Pole.

keep aloft for fifty days. He carried with him a lifeboat, so that if compelled to descend they might be able to keep aloft until rescued by a passing ship, and the course he had planned for his voyage was that followed by the great ocean liners of which there are many at all times coming and going.

Thereafter came Dr. Cook's widely proclaimed but now discredited story that he had reached the pole by sledges over the northern ice, and Peary's more authentic narrative of having successfully achieved that object.

His true course from his starting point was approximately northeast. The course he made was approximately southeast, as he was rescued some 150 miles due east of Cape Hatteras.

Wellman's airship was reported to have been equipped with food and fuel sufficient to enable himself, his six companions and his airship to cannot be forced, as Mr. Foster assumes it may be. What's Taft to Canada, or Canada to Taft? If Canada can strike a fair bargain that will give us access to a better market for our products it ought to be done.

It is satisfactory to learn that the Home Government has invited Lord Kitchener to become a member of the Committee on Imperial Defence and he has accepted.

Uncle Sam's corn crop this year promises to exceed 3,000,000,000 bushels and is of greater value than his wheat crop and cotton crop combined.

The railway strike in France which seemed so threatening a week ago, has collapsed quite suddenly under the vigorous action of the Government.

Very little has yet been disclosed as to the result of the conference between opposing party leaders in the United Kingdom in regard to the powers of the House of Lords.

The director of the United States census makes the charge that in half a dozen cities and towns the census was padded by the enumerators.

There is a strong movement in the United Kingdom in favor of paying members of Parliament. There are some fifty or more members representing labor who cannot afford to give their time for nothing, and by a decision of the courts the trades unions are not permitted to use their funds to pay members of Parliament.

GOOD READING FOR THE LONG WINTER EVENINGS.

It's but a step from fall to winter—the season of short days and long evenings spent indoors.

But the right reading material is often lacking when most wanted. You have read all the books around the house—possibly over and over again. The evening paper has been scanned even to the last "out-of-town" social item.

This is when a good magazine is appreciated—a magazine that arrives regularly at your home each week, with its quota of short, breezy stories; its illustrations vividly picturing current events far and near; its interesting discussions of important

Tailoring for Tasty Ladies. No matter what your personal tastes may be we can finish a suit for you that will give good wear and satisfaction as long as you wear it.

THE HOUSE OF QUALITY

SUITS IN COLLEGE STYLE

THE College Cut is the style of suit that appeals to the young men—and most young men will have no other sort.

THERE is a certain dash and finish in the typically well dressed college man's clothes, quite different from ordinary business styles.

FOR many years we have made close study of College Clothes having just this air of smart campus style.

WE take pleasure in showing the young man who's looking.

THE cut shows two of our favorite models the fabrics are as smart and classy as the cut and tailoring.

WE have also two and three button in Double Breasted Suits $8.00, $10.00, UP TO $22.00.

HON. GEORGE E. FOSTER ON RECIPROCIITY.

The Canadian Century has published an article from the pen of Hon. George E. Foster, M. P., entitled Reciprocity with the United States, Who Wants It? The article is embellished with a portrait of the author.

reverent allusion to sacred events and a quotation from the sacred writings. Here is an instance. We quote: "When in agony of soul President Taft was experiencing his bitter Gethsemane, and deserted by all the native angels of helpfulness, was crying out in anguish.

Mr. Foster's argument may be summarized in a few sentences. That President Taft, alarmed at the insurmountable in his party demanding tariff reduction wants some form of reciprocity with Canada; that Mr. Fielding timidly helped him out last spring by making some concessions, which ought not to have been made and seems likely now again to do so, that the American tariff is nearly twice as high as ours, and we are buying twice as much of our neighbors as we sell to them; that the time is now most inopportune for Canada to negotiate; that we should wait until the American tariff is reduced to some parity with ours and then consider whether further mutual reductions are advisable.

"'Twas he who lifted the cross and wiped the sweat-stained brow and led the President and his party up the hill of victory and turned walking into jubilation.

"It is plain to see who at that time wanted and got the measure of unrequited reciprocity."

Surely this is neither quite reverent nor convincing. Nor is it any evidence against the value of reciprocity that Mr. Taft and a large section of the American people who were formerly opposed to it are now in its favor. At various times past the leaders of both our political parties in Canada sought a renewal of the old reciprocity treaty, or some form of mutual trade concession at Washington. The American tariff was then as now much higher than ours. Indeed before the national policy of protection was adopted in Canada the difference was perhaps greater than now, yet Sir John Macdonald had been till then by his own avowal, seeking for a reciprocal trade arrangement with our neighbor, believing it would be for the good of Canada.

Mr. Foster weakens the force of his argument, such as it is, by some impassioned rhetoric and a none too

THE OLD HOMESTEAD AT THE GRAND.

It is but seldom that the Grand Opera House has so large and elite an audience as assembled last evening to greet the production of "The Old Homestead." The mere mention that this old favorite was to be presented was of itself sufficient to assure a good house and when produced by a capable company the pleasure lingers.
