SATURDAY MORNING, APRIL 1, 1905

BRAVERY AT PORT ARTHUR.

A British correspondent with the Japanese Army at Port Arthur describes an assault upon one of the Russian trenches. The assailants had "come to grips" with the defenders, and the stubborn firmness of the latter, with bayonets fixed, made them like a solid wall. The correspondent concludes:

But it had to end. The old Colonel had fought his way through his own men to the very point of the struggle. He stood on the parapet, and his rich voice for a second curbed the fury of the wild creatures struggling behind him. "Throw yourselves on their bayonets, honorable comrades!" he shouted; "those who come behind will do the rest!" His men heard him, his officers heard him. Eight stalwarts dropped their rifles, held their hands above their heads, and flung themselves against the traverse. Before the Russian defenders could extricate the bayonets from their bodies the whole pack of the war dogs had surged over them. The trench was won.

This may be a rather highly colored picture, says an exchange, but the situation is easily imaginable and the demand made on the devotion of the Japanese infantry-men was no greater than they are known to have met unhesitatingly at less decisive moments.

Sir William Mulock is moving rapidly in the direction of public ownership in the telephone service. There is a growing reluctance toward dependence on private corporations for necessary public services.

The month of March which has just passed out has been in striking contrast to the severity of mid winter. Mild spring-like weather has been our lot during the past four weeks and has done much for us here for the preceding months of 1905.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has characterized the exclusion of Canadian live cattle as mistaken legislation. There are many in Canada who see that the protection system is mistaken legislation, but that is a long way from securing its removal.

An Ottawa despatch of yesterday to the afternoon papers which in view of our Ottawa telegram of this morning is evidently incorrect says: A delegation from Prince Edward Island waited upon the Government today and asked that the terms of Confederation be carried out by the Dominion Government. The delegation was composed of Captain Joseph Read, Father Burke, J. E. B. McCready and Neil McQuarrie. The delegates were appointed at the Provincial convention and represent both political parties. The delegation carried with them to Ottawa resolutions passed by the convention stating that the terms of Confederation which called for continuous steam communication between the Island and the Mainland had not been fulfilled and asking for the fulfillment of same. The delegates took the ground that it is for the Dominion Government to say what means should be adopted to carry out the terms of union but suggested that to begin with there should be a powerful ice-breaker built. This would only be temporary because the delegation holds that the only possible way to maintain continuous communication is by the construction of a tunnel. M. J. Haney the well known contractor made an offer to build the tunnel for $10,000,000. It would be between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine a distance of 7 1/2 miles. M. J. Butler, assistant chief engineer of the National Transcontinental railway, accompanied the delegation and said that sufficient data was on hand to establish the feasibility of a tunnel. Mr. Butler was Mr. Haney's engineer on the Hillsboro Bridge and all the members and Senators accompanied the delegates.

Clarence McKinnon, who goes to take charge of his new work in Winnipeg about May 1st. Rev. A. J. The difficulty of transferring mails by courier route on the island at present is only equalled by the work of the mid winter during the big storms. Courier McEvin who left the city on Tuesday took till yesterday going as far as Hampton and return. Courier Brown only reached the city once since last Saturday. He travels by ice to Belfast and sends the mail bags ashore to the different post offices by hand sleighs. Yesterday Samuel Drake, Pownal brought the mail in from that place and returned in the afternoon.

It is understood here that among the Mt. Allison competitors for the Rhodes scholarship were Egerton Brecken, a son of Rev. Ralph Brecken, and a graduate of two or three years' standing who has since studied in Victoria College, Toronto, and is now in the Northwest engaged in missionary work. Another is Mr. Rogers who had a distinguished course at the University. The third was Mr. Trites of Sackville, a recent valedictorian, who since leaving college has been taking a law course at Dalhousie. The fourth is Mr. Dixon of Sackville, son of the late Amasa Dixon.

The North Sydney town council has met Captain Farquhar, Halifax, to ascertain the details of his railway dry dock scheme. It involves the expenditure of $250,000, and the town is asked to grant a bonus of $2,500 a year for 15 or 20 years with free water and exemption from taxation. The captain also proposes to establish a wrecking plant to cost about $125,000 at North Sydney. The Dominion government will give a bonus of 3 per cent. for the dry dock and will, it is hoped, liberally subsidize the proposed wrecking plant, which would be of great advantage, as North Sydney occupies an exceptionally good position with relation to the St. Lawrence route.
