James Bethune Newspaper Man Passes Away

James Bethune, for thirty years proofreader of the Halifax Chronicle and for sixty-three connected with newspaper work both in Canada and the United States, died Friday at the home of his one surviving child, Mrs. James Jensen, 61 LeMarchant street. Mr. Bethune was 84 years of age, and his death occurred exactly two years and one day from the time when his pencil had made the last correction in the proof sheets of the paper he had served for three decades. He retired on Monday, April 29, 1935, and since that time has made his home with his daughter, from whose dwelling the funeral took place Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The Rev. P. E. Ellis, priest assistant of All Saints Cathedral, officiated and interment was in Camp Hill cemetery.

CHARLOTTETOWN NATIVE

Mr. Bethune was born at Charlottetown, P. E. I., on Jan. 11, 1853. He left school in 1868 and went to Summerside, where he was apprenticed on the Summerside Progress, a newspaper owned by the late R. T. Holman and edited by Thomas Holman. Mr. Bethune recalled that Kirwin had served with the North-west during the Civil War and had published a book on his experience. Kirwin was a practical printer and frequently set his own editorials in type instead of furnishing copy to a compositor. He later went to Boston to join the staff of the Boston Herald. Mr. Bethune remained in Summerside until 1872, when he moved to Halifax. He found a position as compositor on the old Halifax Reporter, of which the late John Burgoyne was foreman. A close friendship existed between Mr. Bethune and Mr. Burgoyne until the latter's death.

TO NEW YORK

Mr. Bethune left the Island then for New York City where he went to work in the book and job office of Cushing and Burdud. The manager of this company was another Prince Edward Islander, John MacLean, a brother of James MacLean who some years later was practicing law in Bridgewater, N. S. Mr. Bethune did not remain in New York long, and removed to Montreal, where he was employed in the book and job office of Burdud and Desbarats. Returning to Halifax he became foreman of the Halifax Reporter. John Burgoyne having been promoted to the manager's desk.

Later he moved to North Sydney, working as foreman of the North

Sydney Herald for three years. By this time Mr. Burgoyne had become manager of The Halifax Herald, and Mr. Bethune once more returned to Halifax to become foreman of that paper. He remained at the Herald for only two years and in 1884 left for St. Paul, Minnesota. In the western city he was employed in the books and job office of The Pioneer Press. While there he was married to Bertha M. Jones, a sister-in-law of the late W. A. Mills. Mr. Bethune met five Prince Edward Islanders in St. Paul and had tidings of four others. Among those he met were Ben Darby and Charles Schurman. Mr. Bethune did not remain long in the west however. Ill health compelled Mrs. Bethune to return to Halifax and her husband was not long in following her.

NIGHT FOREMAN

Once more in Halifax Mr. Bethune became night foreman at The Halifax Chronicle at a time when John Dunn was both business and editorial manager. Later, Mr. Bethune accepted the offer of Mr. Burgoyne to take a position in the business office of The Herald, and held that job until William Dennis assumed control. He was then for some time a proof reader on the Herald.

Leaving the Herald Mr. Bethune went to North Sydney, there having been some talk of a daily paper being started there. This development did not materialize, however, and in 1905 Mr. Bethune accepted a position as proof-reader with The Halifax Chronicle, which was then published in the old Prince street building. He read proofs for the Chronicle until his retirement and countless thousands of news stories passed under his eyes in the thirty years he was at the job.

Mrs. Bethune died in Halifax ten years ago—Halifax Chronicle.

Skipper of Old Days Passes On

Capt. John Campbell, another of the old school of Gloucester's hardy master marines, died Saturday, February 20, at his home, 43 Warner street, after an illness of about a year at the age of 85 years. He retired about eight years ago after nearly sixty years out of Gloucester, after an adventurous career in the fisheries that included a survival of the great gale of 1873, a storm that took the greatest toll of boats and lives in the history of the fishing industry.

Born at Little Harbor, near Souris, Prince Edward Island, Capt. John Campbell was the son of the late John and Mary (McPhee) Campbell. As a youth on his father's farm he met many of the Gloucestermen when their vessels dropped anchor at "Yankee Cove" for shelter and the crews came ashore for recreation. While digging potatoes or felling trees as a boy his thoughts turned to the less stable but more thrilling life on a vessel's deck.

It was long before this adventurous youth found his way to Gloucester and right away secured his first "sight" on Sch. Rattler, Capt. Chris McPherson, for a trip to the North Bay after mackerel. It was the beginning of an eventful and successful career that was to continue for more than half a century. However, this first voyage was more eventful than anticipated. The Rattler was one of the boats caught out in the great gale of 1873 but was one of the lucky craft to ride out the storm. It was months after before the complete toll of disaster in lives and ships was fully known.

The young man stuck and sailed out of Gloucester for many years as a habiter and in other branches, including the freighting of herring from Newfoundland during the winter season. In due season he had his master's papers and later built the Schs. Eliza B. Campbell and George Campbell, named for his first wife and eldest son.

Others commands were Schs. Argo, Catherine Burke, J. J. Flaherty and Pinta. He went during a time when banks and "spots" were still being discovered, one by himself, "Johnnie Campbell's Spot," which is still being fished today.

Capt. Campbell was twice married. His first wife was Eliza B. McPhee of Burnt Point, Georgetown, Prince Edward Island. There were three children, J. George of Denver, Colo.; Albert S. of Gloucester, and Miss Gertrude L. Campbell of Charlottetown. His wife died in 1894 and four years later he married Mary Ann McDonald of St. Catherine, P. E. I., who survives. He also leaves a sister, Miss Sara V. Campbell, who lives at the Campbell home.

He was a member of the Holy Name Society of St. Ann's Church, Master Mariners' Association and Fernwood Lodge, A. O. U. W. Funeral services were held at St. Ann's Church, where a requiem high mass was celebrated by Rev. Francis J. Dinan. The pall bearers were Capt. Norman A. Ross, Elroy Prior, Colla Powers and John
