

90 Years of Canadian Development

Into the history of The Bank of Nova Scotia has been written ninety years of the life of Canada.

In all that time, The Bank of Nova Scotia has been closely identified with the business and agricultural welfare of the country.

From a few straggling settlements scattered from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes, Canada has grown into a nation spanning the continent.

In that development The Bank of Nova Scotia has had its full share, and the few branches in the Maritime Provinces of 90 years ago have grown into a widespread system that covers practically every place of importance in the Dominion.

The same full service is available to the public at all our branches.

THE Bank of Nova Scotia

J. H. MALCOLM, Manager CHARLOTTETOWN. Branches also at Alberton, Amherst, Borden, Emerald, St. Peter's, Souris, Summerside, Kentville, Montserrat, O'Leary, Victoria.

THE LOVE PENDULUM

BY MARION RUBINCAM

A VISITOR Chapter 2. But once started on the road to recovery, I soon gained strength—and sooner than that, a clear head.

That very day I remembered the owner of the voice—my own aunt. It began to come clearly then—I remembered that people talked of influenza, I remembered trying to go to a dance, or some silly party, with hot head and dry throat, and the collapse at the very door of my aunt's house.

Little things began coming back to me, very slowly, as though I were waking up from a hundred year long sleep. But the things I remembered seemed too impersonal, almost as though they had happened to someone else and not to me.

The next clear thing was the opening of the white door opposite my bed, and the entrance of the chubbier, plukiest, sweetest face I remembered ever seeing. She wore the starched white dress of the hospital attendants—evidently she was my nurse.

For one day I felt her rather than saw her—I merely knew that whenever she came near me I felt stronger and better.

In a few days I asked her suddenly for a mirror.

"That shows you're well," she said, smiling at me as she stood by my bed. She had a little mouth, a deep pink line in her round pink face—and when she smiled she showed ever so many little teeth. Her voice was a delight—it had just enough Irish brogue to give it richness and character.

"I'll tell the doctor you're wanting now to powder your pretty nose. They all want to when they begin to get well."

"I don't want to powder my nose," I said fretfully. "I never use powder, I hate—"

"Of course. No one with a skin like yours needs powder now. But the mirror—we'll wait till the doctor pays his morning call."

"There's a mirror on the dresser."

"Now you're dreaming—like you've been doing for some weeks, miss."

But I knew there was a mirror—my own mirror of mottled tortoise shell. I could see it from the bed. The tiny refusal irritated me. I felt suspicious of everything.

But the nurse was gone and I had not strength to raise my arm, much less get up and get the mirror.

Then the nurse came back, and slipped a cap over my head—one I recognized as having been mine before. Then she brought the mirror and held it for me to see.

All I could find out was that my skin was a dead white—the most curious white I had ever seen, white with blue in it. My eyes were blue, too; they looked haggard and I didn't want to see them. My lips did not seem to have much color—and for the rest, a lace ruffle of the cap came to my eyebrows, and a knot of blue ribbon at one side only added to this curious color combination that was I.

"Take the cap off! I know what's happened," I ordered.

"The nurse pulled it back a little—and I saw myself as I had never dressed before. My entire head had been shaved, all my thick, lovely golden hair had disappeared. My scalp was covered with a fine, yellowish fuzz.

"Sure now, it was a crime, but we always have to do it after a high fever. It'll be in no time," the nurse said consolingly.

I tried to laugh—a weak hysterical attempt.

"Don't look funny!" I asked. "Like a chicken—before it gets fluffy."

The talk ended because the doctor came in.

My hair did grow rapidly. The nurse gave it great care, as she gave me great care. In two weeks I could look at myself without the lace cap on. It began to be interesting watching the new hair grow.

"She looks like a sweet little boy, that she does," the nurse said to my doctor.

Strength came slowly. I had had pneumonia, a very bad case of it, and the terrible depression that goes with convalescence was always with me.

"Where am I?" I asked my nurse once.

"In Dr. Engel's sanatorium."

"How did I get here?"

"Sure, your grand rich aunt from New York hired a private train and brought you all the way up here herself."

"She stayed awhile, but she went home," I announced, remembering the voice I had overheard.

"She's that busy, she says, she couldn't stay once you were out of danger. She had some parties to go to—" the nurse's voice held all the disrespect in the world, though her words were mild enough.

"How far am I from New York?"

"Well now, I don't just know. I have been there once, when I came over from Ireland. That was long since, and it took days to get here."

"Days!"

"Oh, sure it's only hours now, about five or six of them. This is Wellsville, it's near the middle of New York State. It's a pretty place—you'll be about to see it soon."

There was a tap at the door. A gentle little lady entered, carrying a great armful of apple blossoms in her arms.

"Is Miss Bennett better?" she asked.

REMINISCENCE Chapter 3. As I remembered, I had been taken ill in the latter part of the Winter. By the time I was able to walk around and go outdoors the Spring was well under way.

The very day that the new visitor came to see me, I was allowed to get up and sit in an armchair by the window. I had a lovely warm bathrobe of blue velvet with silver tassels, a very expensive gift from my aunt, and I sat rolled up in this while my visitor arranged the apple blossoms in a jar for me.

"I've called before, but you were asleep," she said. "I'm Mrs. Taylor."

"It's so sweet of you to come to see me," I answered. "I'm Constance Bennett. I don't know any—"

Do Not Neglect Your Blood

If it is in abnormal condition, the longer you delay taking a good blood medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, the longer it will take and the more difficult it will be for you to get back to "normalcy."

Not only boils, pimples, eruptions, but headaches, nervous spells, "all-gone" feelings, indigestion and loss of appetite are readily traced to impure blood. Thousands daily getting on the right road to health from the day they began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why not try it?
