PEACE, BLESSED PEACE

Four years, three months and three days in the deep dark shadow of war—and then, suddenly the full blaze of a glorious peace. Peace with victory, peace with honour. The transition yesterday at noon when the word came, was overwhelming. The fire bells, the church bells and steam whistles announced the joyful news for which the people were more or less prepared during the past few days and in a few minutes the streets were thronged with cheering, shouting, flagwaving crowds, tooting and flag-bedecked automobiles, and carriages.

the full significance to the world, to civilization, to us as a province, to many of us personally, of the fact that the war is over, for over it undoubtedly is as the armistice terms were such that a resumption of hostilities is practically impossible. The details of the armistice terms are not yet known but from what has been revealed they practically mean unconditional surrender on the part of Germany, probably as forecasted in the advance report the retirement of the German armies beyond the Rhine and occupation of the Rhine defences by the Allies. By a curious irony of fate the last blow of the war was struck at Sedan where, 47 years ago, Germany brought France to her knees and to unconditional surrender. Sedan was captured by the Allies before the armistice was signed. It is too soon to review all that has taken place during the past four fateful years; suffice it for the moment that peace is once more in the earth and let the people rejoice.

As the full significance of the word Peace, a word that for four long years had been buried under the debris and the sorrow of war, came to be more fully realized by the masses that thronged the streets, there were scenes of rejoicing such as Charlottetown had never experienced, pathetic scenes, also, for there were many who remembered "the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is stilled." It is too soon as yet to realize value can be placed for they were priceless. It has been roughly estimated that reparation for property destroyed by the Germans in France and Belgium will total at least four hundred million pounds. This amount besides the indemnities exacted by the invaders from captured cities must be paid by Germany. There were some twelve or thirteen hundred British ships sunk with their cargoes. If Germany is obliged to pay for the restoration of Northern France she certainly will be compelled to pay for British shipping losses. This refers only to Belgium and Northern France and British shipping. Then there is Serbia, there is neutral shipping and the shipping of the other Allies so that among them all Germany will have bills to pay that will keep her busy for many years. Until these are paid Allied troops will garrison such portions of Germany as may be deemed necessary to insure payment and to guard against any possibility of a recurrence of war until the presable losses master pieces of the middle ages on which no money

Whether the German delegation now en route from Berlin to the western front to discuss armistice terms is armed with authority to accept terms that will be acceptable to the Allies or not will be anxiously awaited by a war-weary world and also by war-wearier Germany. Meanwhile terms of peace and of settlement are being discussed, if not officially, at least by many who get semi-official glimpses inside. As to the material terms, indemnities, restorations and partition of territories there is no doubt that the last farthing will be exacted and when that is handed over Germany's legal debt will not have been half paid. What about the criminals? The London Daily Mail suggests that as an evidence of good faith the present German government should surrender for trial by the Allies: Wilhelm of Berlin, the author of the war and of the order to murder prisoners; General von Kluck, who authorized the first outrages committed by the Prussian armies; General von Buelow who, on August 22 1914 announced that with "my authorization in the town of Ardenne has been laid in ashes and 110 of the inhabitants shot"; General Stenger, for his order of August 26, 1914 to murder all British prisoners and wounded; General von Boehne, who authorized the murders at Thernonde; Major Mantueffel, who ordered the burning and sacking of Louvain, and Captain von Foerster, who murdered the Falaba passengers. To the list could well be added all who participated in the murder of Edith Cavell, all who had any part in the sinking of the Lusitania; Colonel Schurtz, who commanded the artillery corps which time and again shelled Rheims cathedral; all aviators who bombed hospitals; the officer who sank the Llandowery Castle; the German Crown Prince; and all other male members of the Hohenzollern tribe, Hindenburg, Ludendorff and von Tirpitz, the man who first invented German gas, and every German spy throughout the world. If capital punishment could be imposed upon every one of those mentioned there would be none found outside of Germany to shed a tear. The world would then be a better and a sweeter place in which to live.

Your Problems Solved
BY REV. T.S. LINSKOTT, D.D.
(All rights reserved)

Dr. Linscott, in this column will help you solve your heart problems religious, natural, social, financial and every other anxious care that perplexes you. If a personal answer is required, enclose a five cent stamp. No names will be published; if you prefer, sign your initials only, or use a pseudonym.

THE DISPLAY OF WEALTH: "Is it right for a rich man to display his wealth or 'put on style'?" asks, "A Church Member." No wise man no matter how rich will commit the folly of displaying his wealth. When a man does that he is subject of the pity and sometimes the scorn, of right thinking men; but besides this he simply stirs jealousy in the minds of other weak-minded men like himself because they are not rich enough to put on the same display of wealth as he does. The manifestation of pride is a proof of the weakness of character.

POPULARITY: "Is it noble or ignoble to desire or court popularity?" asks W. M. P. To seek for popularity is a sign of weakness of character, but to deserve popularity is noble. The desire which God has placed in the breast of every noble man to excel in his business, trade, or profession, is a sentiment which should be encouraged and cultivated, but the motive to excel should be for popularity, but for the sake of doing good. A well earned popularity however, may be enjoyed by a good man.

THE MARRIAGE PARTNERSHIP. "Bachelor" Wants to know "whether it is a married man's duty to equally divide all financial profits with his wife?" The married relationship is a copartnership. Whatever may be the legal status of the property of the other. In every real marriage the two becomes one; the interests of one are the interests of both. When the husband makes profit the wife also makes it; it is his; it is hers. They belong to each other body, soul and earthly possessions. This, in fact, is practically the marriage covenant. Martial love fused in the wonderful love of God needs no rule or law to govern property, while the parties are living, and it is the duty of both husband and wife to arrange by will, or otherwise, for the proper disposal of their property after death.

HOW A FAMOUS POEM WAS WRITTEN

Admirers of Sam Walter Foss' poem, "The House by the Side of the Road," are many. The story of his writing it is known to few. He was an enthusiastic traveller, and on one of his trips through England he came, at the top of a long hill, to a little unpainted house set almost in the road, so near it was. Near one side was a queerly constructed signpost, pointing to a well-worn path and a sign: "Come in and have a cool drink." Following the path, he found in the side of the bank, some distance from the house, a spring of ice cold water into which a barrel had been sunk and above which hung an old-fashioned gourd dipper. And on a bench near by—a wonder—was a basket of fragrant apples, with another sign, "Help yourself."

Scouting a story, he went back to the house, where he found a childless old couple in straitened circumstances, with the rocky farm as their only source of livelihood. The old gentleman explained that they were too poor to give money, so took this way to add their mite to the world's wellbeing. The beautiful thought and its real helpfulness so impressed Foss that he immortalized with his pen the spirit of the ideal home:

"Let me live in my house by the side of the road
Where the race of men go by;
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
Wise, foolish; so am I.
"Then why should I sit in a scorners' seat
Or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend of man."

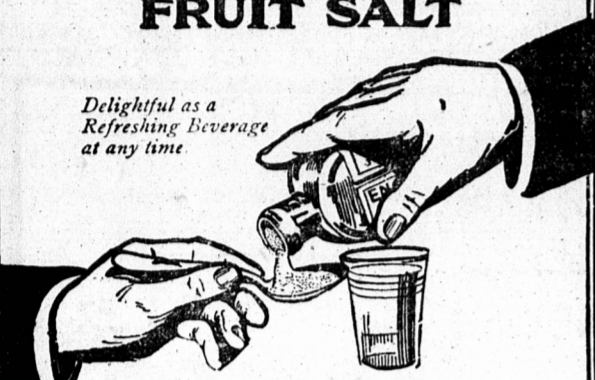

The "Ounce of prevention"

A TEASPOONFUL of Eno's Fruit Salt first thing every morning in a glass or half a glass of cold or tepid water will keep the body's filter, the liver, in a healthy and active state. Eno's never gripes nor weakens. Composed of the refreshing and stimulating elements of ripe fruit juices, it forms a natural and beneficial liver and digestive regulator.

As a recognized safe and gentle aperient, it has been carried and recommended by druggists and physicians for nearly 40 years.

DRAFT BOYS

Sir:—Just a few lines to thank you for the good word you spoke for our drafted soldiers. I don't see any reason why they should not be placed side by side with the volunteers. I for one have a son among the drafted soldiers and I know several others there never were cleaner, more manly or better behaved soldiers left Charlottetown. They are not cowards and how any one could be so bigoted and small souled to think they should not have their name on the Roll of Honour is past my comprehension. Hoping the drafted soldiers will get justice.
