THE PROMOTER'S WIFE

BY JANE PHELPS

MR. FREDERICK APPEARS PROMPTLY AS HE PROMISED

CHAPTER LXXIX.

To have Neil turn me off with a laugh seemed almost more than I could bear. Suddenly I burst into tears, sobbing unrestrainedly. He was at once penitent.

"Poor girl, people have talked to you until you are unnerved," he said trying to calm me. "Come Bab, don't give way like that!"

"But I can't bear to have people say things about you! I just can't live if they keep saying you are dishonest, that you spend your time with women who are not nice; and that you spend money that doesn't belong to you. Why Neil I would rather live on a crust than have you, my husband, do these things. You are smart and clever. It isn't necessary for you to do wrong to make a living. Do promise me, dear, that you will do different."

"All right, I will promise to be more careful," and with that I had to be content. Neil was quick tempered. If pushed too far he invariably rebelled. Then we would quarrel, and I would have accomplished nothing; less than nothing, for after we quarrelled he always remained away; sulking for a day or two, and was altogether hard to manage. But when not crossed he was the easiest going person in the world.

I laid awake long after he slept. My life was becoming a problem, the living of it, I mean. Had I not so passionately loved my husband, loved him, faults and all. I think perhaps it might have been easier for me. But it seemed so dreadful to doubt him; so unwisely to question his integrity. I had always thought him so upright, so honest; and had so carried myself toward him.

He had turned me off when I spoke of being economical. Had said it would hurt him if people knew we were retrenching. I could not understand why cutting out extravagance should make people doubt one but then I knew very little of business, so probably Neil was right.

I again thought of that sheaf of unpaid bills down stairs. I would ask Neil in the morning to leave me a lot of signed checks and I would fill them out and pay every cent we owed.

In the morning when I proposed doing so to Neil, he objected. "I don't care to use so much ready money just now. Pay a few of the smaller ones if you like and let the others go. It won't hurt them to wait a while, I expect they all robbed us anyway."

"Oh, I don't think so, Neil, really I don't! We had the very best of everything, the most expensive. You

EMPIRE-MADE GOODS HAVE PREFERENCE.

Inquiries are being increasingly received by the Canadian Trade Commission concerning the Imperial Government's preferential treatment of Empire-made goods. Not a little difficulty seems to be experienced by manufacturers and exporters in understanding the cabled reports. The position, briefly, is this:

At the cessation of hostilities, import restrictions for Great Britain were so wide-spread that practically an embargo on imports existed unless for food and war uses. It was decided to change this policy only gradually.

The plan was followed of granting broad class exceptions to the main regulation in the form of import licenses and permits. Sir Auckland Geddes defined the official attitude in an announcement from which the following points are taken:

Empire Trade.—No import restrictions would be imposed or continued on goods coming from any part of the Empire without the assent of the War Cabinet, which would not be given unless some unforeseen difficulty arose.

Raw Material.—All raw materials required for British industries would now be admitted without restriction. Semi-Manufactured Articles.—Such of these as were necessary as raw material for British manufactures would also be admitted without restriction, except so far as they were produced by industries which it was essential to foster in the country, and which required sheltering.

Manufactured Articles.—These would be also subject to restriction when not essential for consumption in the country or when produced by industries which required to be shielded from foreign competition while they were being re-established after the disorganization of the war period, or which had been created or encouraged to extend owing to circumstances arising out of the war.

Restriction in such cases would cover a period extending out beyond September 1, when there would be a further review of the whole situation.

mustn't talk as if people were cheats."

"You listen to people who so designate me." A trifle bitterly.

"Not if I can help it, dear! and you know I don't believe you ever meant to wrong anyone — you have been led into these big schemes by older men."

"Well I must be off—I'll call you if anything happens I can't get home to dinner."

"Please don't let anything happen."

I urged as I kissed him good bye. I watched him swing down the street. He usually walked part of the way to the office in the morning, and he needed the exercise. How handsome he was, and how young he looked in his well fitting clothes. He was slender, yet broad of shoulder, and I never saw him in the street that I did not compare him to other men to their disadvantage.

When he passed out of sight I busied myself about a few household tasks until such time as I might expect Mr. Frederick. He came promptly at eleven, as he had promised.

"You always keep your word, do you not?" I asked.

"Always if possible. To what do you refer?"

"Your promptness in keeping appointments."

"Oh, not to be prompt in that respect is unforfeitable! especially when the appointment is with a lady."

"I forgot to ask you about Mr. Powers the other day. Did you see him?" I queried when we were seated in the library.

"Yes — I was with him some little time."

"What did he say? Does he really think Neil is doing wrong, that his business isn't all that it should be?"

"One question at a time please." Then soberly: "I will tell you as nearly as I can remember just what he said."

Tomorrow—Mr. Powers looks up properties Neil advertises.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR HELPING OTHERS.

A month ago a Canadian soldier in France cabled his father and mother in Toronto that he was returning home immediately with a Belgian girl. His father and mother, very prominent in social life of Toronto, were somewhat embarrassed by the cablegram, for they thought their son of twenty-three, who had been three years at the front, had without notifying them married outside their social circle.

This particular Canadian soldier arrived home the other day, and with him was a Belgian girl four years old. His father and mother were much relieved when he told them how he was walking through the streets of Brussels one day, and the little girl ran and caught hold of his hand and said to him, "I want you to take me home." He could not resist the child's request, and Canada is the richer by one little Belgian girl four years old, and she is richer by a foster father and mother to take the place of those she lost during the war.

A returned member of the Canadian Aviation Corps has a little French boy, whom he adopted under the laws of France, because the little chap was an orphan and had only his grandmother, dying of an incurable disease, to take care of him. The little, nine-year-old French boy will grow up to be a worthy citizen of Canada.

Many returned soldiers are bringing with them wives they married across the sea, who will aid their husbands in establishing homes, and create additional foundations to progressive Canadian citizenship. They are coming to Canada with every ship, and Canadian life should be the richer for their arrival.

These new citizens of Canada, be they children or women, should receive a cordial welcome from all those with whom he came in contact. It may be natural for the Canadian mother or sister to assume an attitude of aloofness to the wife of the Canadian soldier whom he found across the sea, but if the war has taught us anything it has taught us that charity—meaning loving kindness—is the greatest possible virtue.

By patience and loving kindness and warm-hearted generosity the newcomers to Canada will be assimilated into the community life and become important factors in advancing Canadian ideals.

HEROES WELCOMED.

A very enjoyable evening was spent in the hall at Clyde River on Wednesday, April 16th, in honor of five returned heroes, namely: Ptes. Randolph Murchison, Daniel Livingston, Eldon Darrach, Frederick Simmonds, and Spr. Alexander Murchison, three of which were unable to be present. Rev. W. J. McLeod, former pastor of Clyde River, ably fulfilled the post-tion of chairman, and after opening the meeting by making some pleasing remarks, invited the guests of honor accompanied by Mr. George McLeod of Hunter River, another returned hero, to the platform, also the parents of those who sacrificed their lives for King and country. After the opening chorus "Welcome Home" Miss Catherine McLean read an address, and the little Misses Myrtle Livingston, Ida McLean, Tena McKinnon and Elizabeth McLean made the presentation of a pair of gold cuff links and a five-dollar gold-piece to the boys, and the bereaved parents.

Pte. Randolph Murchison and Mr. John Murray in a fitting reply thanked the friends assembled for the presentation, and the kind reception extended them. The chairman then called on Rev. H. R. Bell, Dr. A. J. Murchison and others, who gave splendid addresses, each paying a high tribute to the returned men and not forgetting the fallen heroes. A most interesting program followed, Miss Norma Murchison presiding at the organ. After cheers for the boys and National Anthem, a dainty supper was served by the ladies of the district.

The address read was as follows: We, the residents of Clyde River School District, assemble here tonight to welcome you home, and congratulate you on your safe return. We highly appreciate and admire the part you've played in our King and country. When the call came for recruits you did not count your lives dear unto yourselves, but unselfishly and heroically volunteered for service. You left your home and dear ones to go and fight for us, that we might still enjoy British freedom. We have at times been extremely anxious about you while at the battle front, and longed for the time to come when the war would be over and you back among us in safety, and glad indeed are we that this opportunity has been afforded us, and that through God's grace you are with us tonight. We are justly proud of the reputation the Canadians have won and have every reason to believe that they stand second to none, in courage, morals and discipline. In the darkest hour of the war you always had our confidence and assurance, and that you were fighting for liberty and justice, and that right must conquer. You did your part nobly to never let the old flag fall, we ask each of you to accept this gift as a small token of our esteem and gratitude, and may we always be found true to the flag that stands for courage, truth and purity.

There are shadows as well as sunshine in life, and tonight while we rejoice over the victory of the Allies and over the return of our boys, our hearts are saddened as we think of those who never more shall return. To the parents and friends of those dear boys who have made the supreme sacrifice, namely, Hector Murray, Alexander Murray, Oswald Darrach, we extend our sincere sympathy. We have the comfort of knowing that they died for a noble cause. We ask you to accept the gift as a token of our appreciation of them, and our deep sympathy for you.

Signed on behalf of Clyde River School District.—(Patriot please copy)

CONTROL OF THE GERMAN PRESS

ZURICH, April 28.—According to reports reaching here from Berlin, the rulers of new Germany have resolved to surpass all the efforts of their predecessors in the exercise of official influence over the press. Immediately opposite the German Foreign Office stands the palace of the new press bureau which the government will create soon. It will be more than a mere government department, for it also will contain a club for journalists.

One part of the palatial building a Berlin despatch says will be devoted to the officers of officials whose work will be that of inspiring the press, and the remainder will be transformed into luxurious clubrooms.

There will be a library, writing-rooms, reading rooms, smoking-rooms, billiard-rooms, a restaurant, an American bar, lounge rooms and a gymnasium, with a telegraph office conveniently attached.

Every conceivable device, it is stated, will be employed to capture and retain the sympathies of newspaper men.

Some persons are like one legged milk stools—no good unless sat upon.

Some women swear like men, while others will not even darn socks.

Ex-Kaiser To be Tried As Instigator of Crimes

(Special to The Guardian.) LONDON, April 30.—The Evening Standard claims that it has the highest authority for asserting that William Hohenzollern will be prosecuted and tried not as the originator of the war but as one of the instigators of crimes as provided in the report of the Commission of war responsibility.

FROM FAR-OFF RUSSIA.

Mr. John A. McInnis, of this city, has received the following letter from his son, Sergt.-Major M. McInnis, No. 9 Det. C.O.C., C.E.F., Vladivostok, Russia. Sergt.-Major McInnis was in Halifax, and left some months ago for Russia.

Vladivostok, Russia, 27 March, 1919.

Dear Father,—Just a few lines to let you know that I am in the best of health, hoping this will find you the same.

We have had a very hard winter here in Siberia, but it is getting warmer now, and there is signs of spring in the air. I suppose the winter is nearly over down there. How did you spend the winter? How is your health?

Well, father, this is a very cold country. At some places this winter it was 65 and 70 below zero. At a place called Omsk the temperature was never higher than 53 below for months this winter and believe me, it is cold. The poor people have suffered untold agonies. There are thousands of people living in freight cars, thankful to get any kind of shelter. When I arrived at Vladivostok last fall there was something like 3,000 men, women and children sleeping in the railway station, lying on the floor or any place they could get to lie down. There was some awful sights amongst them, and this is only one of the towns in Russia, while there are hundreds of others just as bad. I believe conditions are worse far their inland. There must have been thousands of people starved to death here this winter.

Well father, I must close for this time, as I want to catch the mail. I will write you more the next time. Write as soon as you get this, and let me know how you are getting along.

Your loving son, MARK.

HOW TO TELL A GENTLEMAN

If He Has Tassels on His Umbrella He Isn't, Says Butler.

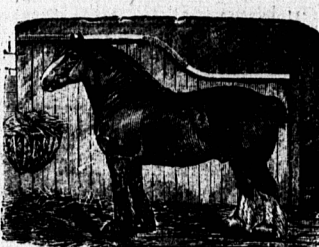

LONDON April 29.—At one of the new British Ministries there is an attendant who had been a butler in Grosvenor Square and prides himself upon a certain instinct for distinguishing blue blood from the other varieties. Some ladies of the department were drawing him on the subject.

"Now, there's Mr. Jones," said one. "Surely Mr. Jones is a gentleman."

The ex-butler looked supremely scornful.

"All very well on the surface, Miss," he admitted. "But he actually walked in the other day with tassels on his umbrella."
