INDIAN WOMEN FIGHT FOR ANCESTORS' BONES.

KANSAS CITY, Kas., July 27—Given until July 29 to vacate the old Huron burying ground in the heart of this city, the three Conley sisters, its self-imposed guardians, have announced that they will not give possession so long as they are alive.

Turn and turn about they are taking in the watch tower they have built in the centre of the tract, the sentinel always having a loaded shotgun near her. Each one swears no United States marshal shall enforce the federal court's decree, finally dispossessing them of the land, until he steps over her dead body.

As next Thursday is the time set by Judge John C. Pollock's order for the vacation, there is no little uneasiness among those who have sympathized with the Indian women's long battle of resistance. The three regard the protection of the burying ground of their father as a sacred duty imposed upon them by the spirits. And all three are good shots.

"The spirits of my father and mother," said Miss Lydia Conley grimly today, "and the spirits of my ancestors told me to build this watch tower and protect the noble Indians who lie buried here. No one shall move the bones of my people so long as Lydia Conley is able to lift a hand."

The old Huron Cemetery is in the heart of the business district of this city. At one side is the Carnegie library and beside it the Masonic Temple, the finest in Kansas. The principal business street of the city borders it on one side.

Business men of Kansas City, Kan., who wanted the plot, prevailed upon Congressman J. B. Bowers to get a bill through Congress for the sale. The $50,000 to be paid for it is to be divided among the surviving Wyandotte Indians, the bones of the dead Indians are to be removed and the place converted into a site for a business block.

The Conley sisters immediately took up the fight. They tried every resource of the law unsuccessfully. Miss Lydia appealed in person before the Supreme Court of the United States, the first woman to be accorded that right, but was unsuccessful, although the court, in sympathy, told her it was "driven" to decide against her.

Then it was the three built their watch tower and began their shot-gun patrol of the cemetery. The matter was finally decided in the courts, when Judge Pollock issued the mandate, setting July 29 as the time for vacation.

The basis of the Conley sisters' claim is that their granfather, who once owned the whole State of Ohio, a chief of the Wyandottes, signed the treaty with the Government in 1855 in which this cemetery was given to the Indians.

"From a legal standpoint we are entitled to this small tract of ground," Miss Lydia Conley said, "at least you would think so when the bones of our people already lie buried there. This turn the thing has taken simply means that the United States Government is once more breaking its faith with the Indians. So far as I and my sister are concerned, the matter will end as it did upon most of the other occasions when the white man broke agreements—the stamping out of the Indian and the inevitable triumph of the white race. But even though there can be but one ending, as I said before, the Government will have to move these bones over my dead body."

BLOODHOUNDS WERE THROWN OFF SCENT.

RICHMOND, Va., July 26—On the ownership of a shotgun of an ordinary type today hinges the solution of the sensational mysterious slaying of Mrs. Louise Owen Beattie, Jr., wife of the Manchester banker who, according to the story told by her husband, was shot down while seated behind him in their automobile.

The murder is the most mysterious in the history of the State. Despite the efforts of more than a thousand searchers no one has seen a trace of the man who, according to Beattie, blocked the Midlothian pike on Tuesday night, and when asked to give up half of the road, raised his shotgun and fired directly into the Beattie automobile, instantly killing Mrs. Beattie. The woods surrounding the turnpike for more than five miles have been thoroughly searched without revealing the slightest clue.

Two packs of bloodhounds brought to the scene within six hours after the crime was committed, wandered aimlessly around two pools of blood in the middle of the Hard Turn Pike and then turned their muzzles skyward and bayed loudly and long. It was plain that they were unable to pick up a trail that could be followed.

until tomorrow.
The Beatties were married last August. They have a two-weeks-old baby, and, according to Beattie, the fact that it was not in its mother's arms when she was killed was due to its having been asleep when they started on the ill-fated night ride.

Beattie says they were returning from a fifteen-mile run, when, at a lonely spot in the pike, he saw a man jump from the bushes into the middle of the highway. He jammed the brakes on as the figure, dimly visible in the darkness, demanded with an oath, to know if he was trying to run over him.

"I told him there was room enough for both," said Beattie to the coroner, "and tried to pass him. He seemed drunk and very angry. I noticed he had a shotgun in his hand. Without a moment's warning he raised the gun and fired. The muzzle was not more than a yard from my wife. As he fired I leaped from the car and grappled with him. I seized the gun and he struck me a fearful blow on the nose, rendering me momentarily unconscious. When I recovered he was gone, and with one arm around my head I drove fifteen miles through the darkness."

Beattie has an abrasion on his nose. There were two pools of blood in the road some distance apart. This is also puzzling to the coroner, as whatever blood soaked through the bottom of the automobile should have been caught by the drip pan.

The charge of shot entered Mrs. Beattie's face in a spot not more than an inch and a half in diameter, the muzzle of the gun having been held so close to her head that wads and all entered the wound.

Detectives arrested Irving Brown, a negro who lived near the scene, and whose father said he had a gun similar to that with which the crime was committed, but Brown gave so good an account of himself that he was soon discharged.

BOSTON WOMEN ARE INDIGNANT.

BOSTON, July 27—Some resentment has been stirred in the hearts of Boston women by the assertion that they may be should not have to work, but merely with the idea of spending the rest of their lives in idleness as expressed by Mrs. Beatrice Farnham Otto, a Boston artist, who has just married a Western minor and prospector.

Mrs. Samuel Johnson of 69 Thomas Park, South Boston, who manages a house of 15 rooms for a family of four, with the aid of one maid gives the reasons for this indignation.

"Mrs. Otto's theory is perfectly preposterous," she says. "In the first place, most girls want to marry largely so that they can manage a home of their own.

"But anyone who thinks that any married woman spends her days in idleness, whether she be rich or poor, has never stopped to think what the world would be like if the home-keeping women were suddenly to stop working. It is needless to name over the daily round, a never-ending treadmill that no one can appreciate who has not tried it. I speak of all classes.

"If a woman doesn't cook the meal herself, she has to see that someone else does it, and since the scale of living becomes more and more particular with an increased number of servants, I am not at all sure that the wealthy woman has any more leisure than the poor.

"The more important the husband's position, the more valuable is every second of time that can be saved to him. And the more social life that is undertaken, the more important is it to have everything come off smoothly.

"But take myself; for three weeks the platters have been here and I have had to be here also to see that every detail is carried out. Then came the plumber for repairs requiring nearly a week, and there is the care of the lawn and garden to attend to, the sending out of the large rugs to be cleaned, together with such special work as the window washing and the house cleaning, which must be hired from outside in my case—all of which details are always overlooked in a survey of a woman's time.

"The very acts of graciousness, as they are called, require enough time and energy in running up and down stairs and the like to count as a piece of work. Then there is keeping track of people's things—mothers are proverbially responsible for the lost and the broken—and all this without one mention of the care even a single child requires, which is infinite.

"To confine ourselves to the household duties—does anyone realize how many hours a week it takes just to send the laundry out to the three or four different types of laundries, after having first collected it from all over on its return to sort and list it again and distribute it?"

"As for the kitchen work, it is one thing to issue your orders, and even more important to see that they are carried out. If you can get help sufficiently experienced not to require teaching the very rudiments, you are fortunate.
