Captain W. Holt 100 Years Young

Newport's Oldest Citizen Followed the Sea Until His Eighties. Has Never Used Rum or Tobacco

NEWPORT, R. I., April 10.—Newport's oldest citizen, Capt. William Holt, celebrated his 100th birthday March 27.
 A hale and hearty sailor, born and brought up in the Point section of Newport, Capt. Holt followed the sea until he was 84.
 A little hard of hearing and eyesight not as keen as when he traded in the West Indies, Capt. Holt spends his days in a comfortable arm chair in the living room of his home at 10 Gould street.
 Today he expects a strenuous time opening letters of congratulations, welcoming friends and a family reunion of his three daughters and son, his eight grandchildren and his three great grandchildren.
 Holder of a 50-year jewel in the Rhode Island Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Capt. Holt was among those present at the laying of the cornerstone of the lodge's new building last winter. Scarcely a week goes by that he does not motor about the city, especially over on the Point, where he recalls the scenes of his childhood, now greatly changed, and sniffs the salt air from the waters which he knows like a book.
 His long life, he attributes to abstinence from tobacco and alcoholic liquor.
 Born in Newport March 27, 1831, Captain Holt was the sixth generation of the Holt family which came from London to America aboard the "True Love," a fast schooner in the early 1600's. The family eventually settled in Rhode Island.
 At an early age, Captain Holt obtained a captain's ticket and a pilot's license and for many years was a familiar figure along the Newport waterfront. Although he served in the coastal trade for several years between southern ports and the West Indies, the greater part was spent fishing locally.
 During the season, he pulled his lobster pots from Block Island to Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard and at other times engaged in deep sea fishing, but all that time he added to his income by piloting big vessels through Narragansett Bay.
 Early in life Captain Holt joined the Friends' Church, where for many years he was superintendent of the Sunday School, and while not as active, as formerly, he still maintains his interest in that church.

THE IMPORTANCE OF USING RASPBERRY CERTIFIED STOCK

(Experimental Farms Note)
 In order to avoid disappointing results in new raspberry plantings, growers are strongly urged to use Government certified raspberry stock for setting out. This recommendation is made because it is realized that certain serious diseases of the raspberry are commonly spread through planting canes from diseased parent plants. These diseases, mosaic and leaf curl are known to cause reduced yields, inferior quality fruit and in addition, are contributing factors to killing back and death of plants.
 From a study of these diseases over a number of years it has been repeatedly demonstrated that the prevalence can be greatly reduced by the use of certified stock, which is known to be free from disease. Such stock has received rigid inspections during the growing season and found to be free from mosaic or leaf curl and when used for planting out will produce vigorous, healthy plantations which will remain profitable for a long time. On the other hand, where stock for planting is secured from an unknown source the possibility is that the new plantation will contain high percentages of disease. Such a plantation has at best a poor start. Diseased plants will be stunted and weak, eventually dying or producing reduced yields. In addition they provide a source of further infection to remaining healthy plants and as the spread is quite rapid in a plantation a short time will see its production unprofitable. Avoid such results by using certified stock, thus insuring a healthy start to a plantation which will continue profitable a greater number of years.
 The inspection and certification of raspberries is carried on annually by the various branches of the Division of Botany. This service to the growers is free of charge and full information concerning its features will be furnished on request to the Dominion Laboratory of Plant Pathology, St. Catherine's, Ontario, or to the Division of Botany, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

TAXATION THREATENS BRITISH MILLIONAIRES

LONDON, April 10.—British millionaires are threatened with extinction as a result of heavy taxation and declining trade.
 There were 487 millionaires in Great Britain and Northern Ireland last year, according to the statistics of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. This was 24 fewer than the previous year. If this decline continues, there will be no more millionaires in Britain by 1950.
 A millionaire, according to the British definition, is a man with an income of at least $250,000 a year. There were 130 persons in Britain last year with incomes over $500,000. Four years ago there were 144 such persons.

GOOD DANCERS WIN POPULARITY

PITTSBURGH, April 10.—Smoking is not essential to popularity, nor is fine clothing, but good dancing is, according to Miss Adelaide Hunter, Campus Queen of University of Pittsburgh.
 Miss Hunter, elected by the men students as the most popular girl on the campus, revealed she had "never smoked a cigarette."
 "Smoking isn't necessary to popularity," she said. "Clothes are not essential. The first requirement is being a perfect dancer. College men like a girl who can dance divinely."
 Other requirements she listed as "a moderate interest in sports, such as swimming and skating, and 'friendships' instead of 'heart affairs' while in college."
 Ralph Harkins, red haired senior, was acclaimed the most popular male student by the Pitt co-eds. He is working his way through college in a variety of ways, including work as a laborer in a steel mill. He hopes to be a lawyer.

Pepys' Wife's Petticoats Made Him Silk Waistcoats

BY MARY KNIGHT

London magazine today and you will find their counterparts.
 In France, during the last half of the 18th Century, dress attained its highest point of significance when it marked unmistakably the various stages of the Revolution. Sentimentality came into fashion with Rousseau's "Emile" and Nouvelle Heloise, and Goethe's "Werther." Women's hair was dressed in "bandeaux of love," or "puffs of sentiment," and Marie Antoinette and the ladies of her court sought valiantly to return to the simplicity of nature by masquerading in the Trianon at Versailles attired as shepherdesses and milk maids.

Today, one of the most romantic and sentimental collections of feminine finery seen in Paris, has come from the work room of the famous Paul Poiret. The names given to the frocks, "Love me," "Irresistible," "My Heart," prelude any doubt as to the sentiment of fashion begun 200 years ago.

FRENCH BETTING BOOTHS BUSY

Because of the large and growing amount of business more urban parliament street betting booths are being opened in France. Both in Paris and smaller cities the innovation has been a success from the start. On the opening day portable ticket windows installed in the entrances to motion picture theatres in Paris were besieged long before the opening hour by crowds anxious to place their bets. At some windows there was spirited scuffles caused by the men's anxiety to lay their bets before closing time. Bets may be placed in the usual multiples of five francs on the day of the race. At present the latest time for placing a bet at one of the street offices is noon in Paris and 11 o'clock outside of the city. An extra hour will be allowed in summer.

The World's Richest Men

Russia's Wealthiest Citizens Hide Identity for Fear of Soviet Punishment. Money Concealed as Shameful and Dangerous Possession. Its ownership Brings no Happiness or Luxury

MOSCOW, April 9 (U.P.)—Money, which in the surrounding capitalist world is a symbol of power and achievement, in the Soviet Union usually signifies exactly the reverse. The most powerful and most respected social classes earn less and possess less than the groups which are practically outlaws.
 Private fortunes having been abolished by the Soviet system, the possession of great wealth is almost incontrovertible proof of speculation, private trading, or other activities considered anti-social.
 The strongest class of individuals consists of the Communists. Theoretically at least they are consecrated to a life of hard work and poverty like the Franciscan monks. They must not earn more than the "party maximum," which is 30 rubles a month. That limit applies alike to Stalin and the lowliest member of the Communist Party.

Despised Class

The most despised class consists of Nepmen, or private traders, and they are the only ones who in the past years had any opportunity to save money. Now that the Nepmen rapidly are being put out of business, this last class of rich will also disappear.
 Nevertheless there must be thousands of persons who have managed to store up large amounts of money. Perhaps they are former merchants who somehow succeeded in concealing and saving a stock of gold. Perhaps they are businessmen, who during the Nep period between 1921 and 1927 hoarded rubles. More likely they are illegal traders, speculators, who continue to build up their private piles until the G. P. U. firing squad gets them.
 In any event, they are not persons who deserve any envy. Their money is something to hide as a shameful and dangerous secret. As former merchants they are most likely disfranchised and therefore practically outlaws. They are in danger of being arrested, their money confiscated—or, more politely, "taxed" into the State pockets. They certainly never boast of their wealth.

No Joy in Wealth

Let us call him Ivanov, which is as popular a name here as Smith among Americans. Ivanov doesn't dare dress or live better than his poverty-stricken neighbors because it would give away the secret of his hidden rubles. He is frightened by the rattle of every wagon on the cobblestones, for it may be the GPU wagon sent for him.
 Poor Ivanov knows the bitterness tasted by Midas. He has wealth, but can do nothing with it. As a disfranchised person he may be thrown out of his room and even a million

SALARIES SUBJECT TO QUESTIONNAIRE

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 10.—The average salary of a Yale man four years after graduation is about $3,000. This figure has been established by a questionnaire sent out to determine salaries, reasons for changing jobs, and the occupational history of the graduate after obtaining his degree.
 The inquiry included a searching investigation of the 1926 class of Yale, and disclosed that such confidential pursuits as advertising, merchandising, commercial transportation and general office work led in salary returns by producing a yearly average of $4,000, for the college man four years out. After these are financial occupations, banking, investment securities, real estate and insurance with about $3,600, and close behind these come manufacturing and engineering. The average return from teaching is about $2,100. The best paid form or work was shown to be salesmanship with an average return of $4,200 to those engaged in it. Professional workers who have utilized most of their spare time since graduation in continued study, average about $2,000.
 Nearly sixty percent of the cases reported show that positions have not been changed since graduation. The graduates who have changed have held from two to seven jobs, and their reports show that they are averaging $200 a year less than those who are still with their first firm.

rubles may fail to get him another, since all available space goes first to respectable factory workers. He may need a pair of shoes, but as an outlaw he is not entitled to them. Only by roundabout bribes and underground trading can he obtain the bare necessities of life.
 His rubles are useless to him. If he should escape abroad they will be even more useless, since rubles have no recognized monetary value outside of Russia. His only hope is to change the rubles into foreign currency somehow—a process that is illegal and fraught with danger.
 Imagine Ivanov at home late at night. With thumping heart he is climbing up the brick oven and burrowing among the crevices of rotten ceiling rafters. Imagine that and you have a picture of the richest man in Russia putting through a banking transaction: he is concealing a few American dollars which he has obtained by paying out a stack of his useless rubles.
 In the gallery of rich men the world over, Ivanov is the one tragic figure. No doubt he would gladly give all his riches for a trade-uniform which would make him a respectable Soviet citizen entitled to a regular bread ration.

monthly envelopes $22.05 were reported. Miss Mary White closed the meeting with prayer and the Benediction.

 Super-tax is the bane of large fortunes in Britain. Persons with an income of $750,000 must pay 48 per cent to the government.
 Fifty thousand more persons paid income tax in Great Britain in 1929-30 than in the previous fiscal year.
