THE GREEN HUSSAR

By HENRY VON RHAN

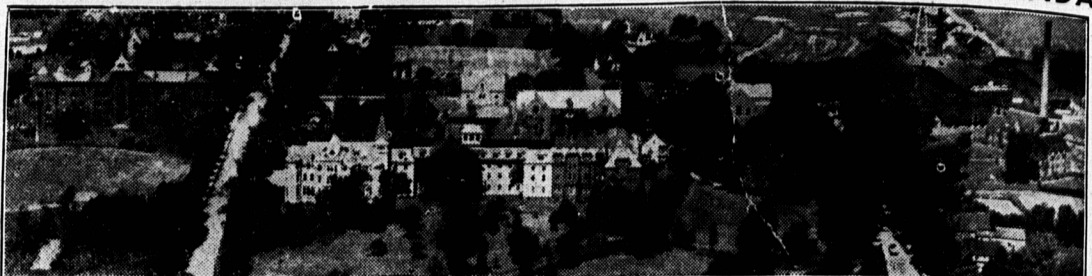

(Continued) At the King's from the twinkled in Hohenlohe's eyes. I feel, said the King gravely, crossing to the bedroom, that we are in good hands, and while I am dressing to go out Count Hohenlohe will show our confidence in your Majesty to take the refuse lift?

the King, when one wishes to be alone. Precisely, cried the hotelier eagerly, and if your Majesty's person will be safe in the streets after quitting my hostelry...

Progressive Education In A Girls' School

The Progressive trend in education is being interpreted in an interesting way in the Girls' School at Mount Allison, Sackville, N. B. It is now generally believed by educationists that both maladjustments of personality and our present chaotic society have been produced in part by an educational system which has been concerned too little with personality and too much with curriculum.

Yes, said the King. Bending over her hungry mouth, he felt the short, warm kiss of tired lips and a soft hand fluttering over his face. Suddenly he drew himself up. Daring, he said, you make me forget everything. Stay where you are a second. I shall be back at once.

He dashed out of the room and down the stairs. Drawing something from his overcoat pocket, he bounded up again, closing the door behind him softly. Anne looked up with smiling eyes. From the two packages in his hand he held out one.

A little present for my sweetheart, he said simply. Eagerly Anne unwrapped the paper. The lid of a box flew back, disclosing a beautiful set of straight razors set in ivory, with a plain card inscribed, To Tim from Alexander II.

How very thoughtful of you, Alex! said Anne laughing. That is just what I needed. Forgive me, said the King, retrieving the box in some confusion. This is the first purchase I had made for me in Gorlitz. Will you please see that they reach my good friend Tim?

He snatched the string on the other box. This, he said, handing her a green velvet jewel box, upon the top of which was the faded gold imprint of the arms of Zagau, my valet Jonas smuggled out. Slowly she lifted the lid. Gasping in amazement and delight, she drew out a chain of forty perfect diamonds set in heavy gold, supporting a pear shaped pendant blazing arrogantly with undreamed of shades and colors.

It was my mother's wedding present, said the King, from my father. Anne ran the chain through her fingers. Each stone seemed to shine with a multicolored mirage, like picture of the brilliant pageantry of those who had worn it.

signalling a silent dismissal to the hovering servant with the other. As the door closed again he ripped the envelope open, pulling out a piece of paper. By the light of the fire he read: The King left his hotel by the back door. How will the White Butcher of Zagau choose to leave this world? INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST COMMITTEE OF DIRECT ACTION. Slowly the King reread the message, then folded the paper and put it in his pocket.

What was it, Alex? she asked anxiously. The King hesitated a moment, then, shrugging his shoulders, reached for the paper and handed it to her. You will have to find out sooner or later, he muttered. Gasping, Anne read the message. Alex, she cried, what does it mean? It means, answered the King bitterly, that instead of leaving love behind, hate has followed me. I hate so strong that it is not afraid to flaunt its power of destruction.

Matheson - MacRae Wedding On the morning of August 10, 1937, at 10 o'clock, Brookfield Presbyterian Church, Brookfield, was the scene of a pretty summer wedding, when Miss Florence Isabelle MacRae, third daughter of Mr. MacRae and the late William M. MacRae was united in marriage with Mr. John Philip Matheson, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Matheson of Oyster Bed Bridge.

Friends of the bridal party had decorated the church with a profusion of ferns and garden flowers. Many interested friends from various centres witnessed the ceremony. To the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, played by Miss Beth Coles, the bridal party took their place at the altar where the beautiful and impressive marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. G. Carlyle Webster of Charlottetown. The double ring ceremony was used.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother Mr. Norman MacRae, was dressed in white satin and lace and wore a Juliet cap. Her bouquet was Ophelia roses. The bride's only attendant was her niece, little Helen MacRae, who acted as flower girl. She was dressed in blue organdy and carried a basket of sweet peas and snapdragons.

Mr. Elmer MacRae, brother of the bride and Mr. Wallace Higgins, cousin of the groom, were ushers. During the signing of the register "O Perfect Love" was beautifully rendered by Miss Coles, after which the bridal party left the church to the accompaniment of Mendelssohn's Wedding March. A buffet luncheon was served at the home of the bride's mother, after which the popular young couple, amid showers of confetti, left by motor for a honeymoon trip through the Maritime Provinces. The bride's going away costume was a rose suit with accessories of white. On return Mr. and Mrs. Matheson will reside at Oyster Bed Bridge where Mr. Matheson is a prosperous young farmer. Both wishes of a host of friends follow the young couple.
