AGED RESIDENT DEAD. Mrs. N. Pearson died at her home Chelton on Sunday Mch. 23rd. The late Mrs. Pearson was a strong christian character, mild, unassuming she appealed to all with whom she came in contact. To know her was to love her. Of her it could truly be said "Her children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." Prov 31:28. She leaves to mourn a devoted husband and three children Ethel (Mrs. Harris Wright, Middleton) Louis and Earle both at home. Everything that kind and loving hands could do was done but God seen fit to remove her to her home above.

YOUNG CHILD DEAD. At Kensington on March 24, 1924, Lois, infant daughter of Joseph Condon, aged one year and nine months. CHARACTER TELLS THE STORY!

People throughout this country are giving more thought to hygiene and to the purity of remedies on the market, but no one doubts the purity of Doctor Pierce's vegetable medicines, for they have been so favorably known for over fifty years that everyone knows they are just what they are claimed to be. These medicines are the result of long research by a well-known physician, R. V. Pierce, M. D., who compounded them from health-giving herbs and roots long used in sickness by the Indians. Dr. Pierce's reputation as a leading and honored citizen of Buffalo, is a sufficient guarantee for the purity of that splendid tonic and blood purifier, the Golden Medical Discovery, and the equally fine nerve tonic and system builder for women's ailments, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Dr. Pierce's Laboratory is in Bridgeburg, Ontario.

STURGEON NOTES.—On March 20th a jolly bunch of young people from Sturgeon, hitched their horses to their old toboggans and set out for a sleigh ride and landed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horatio Graham, Gasperaux where they rendered a beautiful program, namely Solo by Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Graham, encored, quartette by Misses Pearl King, Ruth Wight, Helen Kearney, Margaret Kearney, and Michla Kearney. Duets by Miss Bertille Nelligan and J. M. Kearney. Duets by Mark Jackson and Lee Wight. Comic songs by Sterling Conrad, Benjamin Graham and J. M. Kearney, encored. Graphophone selections, Miss Cephrina Graham was organist for the evening, after which they retired to the dining room where a sumptuous supper was served in Mrs. Graham's good style. Mr. Sterling Conrad then made a short speech with a few well chosen words, thanking Mr. and Mrs. Graham for the good time they had. The host and hostess fittingly replied by giving one and all a hearty invitation to come soon again. The evening closed by singing "We are all jolly good fellows" which was led by the well known singers, J. M. Kearney and Bertille Nelligan.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Colds. first trip away from home, and having lost his ticket, and having no money to purchase another, seemed to be in a very uncomfortable state of mind. Some of the passengers, learning this, suggested that we purchase another ticket for him, and taking his hint, I started up one side the boat and down the other, and through the long saloon, everyone contributing from twenty-five to fifty cents, it was found we had almost enough. Then the purser gave his twenty-five and the railroad man his forty, and we put the ticket in his young man's hand, making him happy once again. On the way up from the boat to Sackville we skirt the great Tantramar Marsh, with its numerous stacks and barns filled with hay. The Cobequid Mts. are here plainly visible beyond Amherst, and the great dark forests of New Brunswick, and as we near Sackville we note the stately buildings of the University. As we journey on we soon come to Dorchester, where the great penitentiary buildings are, its granite walls speaking of stern justice being meted out for wrongdoing. As we pass on the country roads are broken wide, and the double teams are hauling tremendous loads of logs and lumber. The banks of the tidal rivers here seem to be strewn with great limestone rocks, but which on closer inspection turn out to be ice cakes colored by the muddy waters of the Bay of Fundy. The forests here change from spruce and fir to cedar and pine. We also see some uncultivated fields here, covered with weeds about, the seeds of which are falling out on the hard snow, and with every breeze they go chasing each other away to other fields, there to grow and blossom, but not as the rose.

Among our passengers is Bishop O'Leary returning from Rome, and who, I understand, is bringing out five hundred Croats. He says they are sometimes called his five hundred goats. He is also bringing out four hundred from the Hebrides. These will all be given a farm in the West and helped to get a start. Here in northern New Brunswick the snow is deep, and it is rather cold, there being about thirteen coaches in our train. I suspect it is hard to keep a night in it. Here I spend my first night in a sleeper. The porter makes the beds and draws the curtains with wonderful rapidity, and soon all the berths are occupied. Once in a while one catches glimpses of a white robed forms passing down the aisle, and in our semi-conscious state between wake and sleep, we wonder if these may not be angels, but the breathing sounds of the heavy sleepers remind us that these are mortals like ourselves. Bye and bye we fall fast asleep, and the noise and swaying of the train have no more place in our existence. In the morning we awake refreshed, and commence dressing, which requires no little skill in the small space, for we are jolted from side to side, and the ceiling overhead seems to have a disagreeable habit of hitting one on the top of the head. On drawing the curtains and peeping out we find the conductor is already at work changing the sleeper into a day coach, and being now in the eastern townships of Quebec, the train fills up rapidly with French people, full of gay life,—they are all jabbering and smiling and gesticulating. When I present my long ticket to each new conductor, he looks it over, and at once he becomes interested in me; asks the cost of my ticket, turns over a second seat for my use, and wishes me a pleasant trip. The service given on our train is most excellent, and I am surprised that excellent, and I am surprised that good will and sociability that exists among the passengers. Many of these are returning from a visit to their old homes in the east, and at the end of their journey are met by husband or wife, as the case may be, and I feel inquisitive to see the meeting, and I notice that in most cases the heads come close together and I fancy I hear a soft little noise and I say to myself, "Well, that's all right."

Here and there we pass beautiful lakes, covered with ice, and dotted with islands on which are trees, spruce, pine or cedar. The ice men are busy as bees, cutting and putting up the ice supply, and one can see in places a lone man with his fishing rod, angling through the ice, getting some of the speckled beauties, but the big ones seem to have formed this habit. Arriving in Montreal at noon, we find we stay here until 10.15 p.m. Entering the great R. R. station, I make my way into the restaurant and get my dinner, after which I stroll out to see the city, with its many fine stone or brick blocks, some of which are ten or twelve stories in height. I stand at some of the busy corners and watch with wonder a policeman directing the traffic, which is mostly street car and auto. It goes on with the regularity of clock-work. Going up on the Mountain, I find it teeming with life, girls and boys, with red cheeks, looking the picture of health, most of them on skis, or pulling a toboggan. Here is the great toboggan slide, so notable in Montreal sport; and here from the look-out what a grand view of the great city lying below, stretching away down the St. Lawrence as far as one can see. I single out the great Victoria bridge, the sugar refinery, the elevators; but it is winter, and the river is covered with ice, and one misses the sight of the busy shipping of this greatest of Canadian ports. Leaving Montreal we journey on by sleeper, and am awakened at midnight by bright lights shining into my window, and on looking out I see the great towers of the House of Parliament, and know we are in Ottawa. Today we are running all day in the vicinity of the Great Lakes, and tonight we will be skirting the north shore of Lake Superior. At noon we are passing through the mining district of Sudbury. Mines are everywhere in evidence; freight trains are loaded with ore from which is extracted nickel-silver; and here on both sides of the road are charred remains of the great forest fire, in which so much life and property was destroyed. After another good night's sleep, I awake and see a wondrous sun rising out of Lake Superior, like a great ball of fire, turning the ice on the lake into a blazing furnace. I am, Sir, etc., LAYTON MCGABE. (To be continued.)
