The SNAPSHOT GOLD. TAKE CARE OF YOUR CAMERA. Don't take the chance of missing fine snapshots like this because of a camera in need of repair. Have your camera put in good shape now, and make it a practice to keep it that way. KEEPING his camera in good condition is always one of the prime jobs facing every photographer. But it's doubly important now. For just as there is a scarcity of so many other new goods, there is a scarcity in some types of new cameras. And that means we're all going to have to make do with the cameras and make them serve us as long as we possibly can. Keeping a camera operating smoothly isn't difficult if you'll make a habit of taking care of it. One of the greatest enemies of any camera is dirt, so clean your camera regularly, inside and out. For that, you'll find a soft brush big help, or you can actually blow the dirt out with a small rubber syringe—the kind the druggist sells. Clean the lens with soft cosmetic lens tissue, or the kind that camera shops sell for the purpose, or if you prefer you can use a soft, clean lintless cloth. Don't ever try to take the lens apart—you may damage it seriously. Speaking of "don'ts" in camera care, don't try to oil or grease any part of the camera. It doesn't need it. Next, don't ever try to force your camera if it fails to operate properly, or if it is broken, don't try to repair it yourself. Those two items are among the principal causes of less-than-ideal camera operation. If your camera is badly stuck, or needs repair, by all means take it to your dealer, and let him place it in the hands of a competent camera mechanic. And don't expose your camera to the effects of sun, rain, and sand. Finally, it's a wise plan to send any good camera back to the manufacturer for cleaning and incidental repairs at least once every two years. And, keep it in its case always—for better protection. Take care of your camera and it will take care of you. Illustration. John van Guller.
