

RHEUMATISM.

Some of the most valuable discoveries in medicine had their origin in remote countries among strange people. Quinine came to us from the Indians of Peru; opium from the barbarous races of Asia, and cod liver oil was given to us by ignorant whalers who, because it softened leather, thought it would soften joints stiffened by rheumatism. They were right. It only remained for science to work out the idea, and today cod liver oil is one of the best-known remedies for the treatment of chronic rheumatism. As early as 1754 cod liver oil was recognized as a cure for rheumatism, and a few years later it was found that the same remedy could be used for the cure of skin diseases due to this complaint.

The first step in the cure of rheumatism is to supply the blood with nourishment and to make up the deficiency in red blood corpuscles. These corpuscles convey oxygen to the various tissues in the body and play a very important part in the process of combustion which is constantly going on within the body and which is called the "fires of life." Cod liver oil is an excellent fuel for these fires and they burn more brightly when supplied with it.

The faster the blood is made rich and plentiful in red corpuscles the sooner the rheumatism is driven from the system. In Scott's Emulsion the full value of cod liver oil is combined with hypophosphites of lime and soda, and, being perfectly emulsified, is best suited for the treatment of rheumatism where everything depends upon nourishing the blood quickly and effectually.

Scott's Emulsion differs from any other preparation in that it passes into the system without tax on any of the organs with which it comes in contact. By reason of its immediate action it is enabled to make rich blood faster than disease can consume it, hence it is not long before sufficient headway is gained to drive out the trouble and restore the body to a normal condition. It is in this way that Scott's Emulsion disposes of rheumatism and rids the body of the lingering symptoms that so often threaten a return of the disorder.

So-called wines, cordials and extracts of cod liver oil are worthless as they do not contain the value of the whole cod liver oil and hence cannot furnish the desired benefits. Scott's Emulsion has been the standard cod liver oil preparation for over twenty-five years.

THE POWER OF KINGS AND THE POWER OF THE PRESS

As Presented by Marie Corelli in Her Volume on the Temporal Power—Her Arraignment of Royalty, of the Church and of the Newspapers—Her Sensational Literary Methods.

Marie Corelli's "Temporal Power" is a polemic—the arraignment of royalty and of the Church of Rome in favor of what the author considers Justice, Truth, and the Rights of the People.

In the first chapter a prince and heir to a throne, that throne or where the scene of the story is laid we are not informed, discusses kingship with his father. "Professor," said the prince on one occasion, "what is man?" "Man," replied the professor, sedately, "is an intelligent and reasoning being, evolved by natural processes of evolution into his present condition of supremacy."

"What is supremacy?" "The state of being above or superior to the rest of animal creation." "And is he so superior?" "He is generally so admitted." "Is my father a man?" "Assuredly. The question is superfluous."

"What makes him a king?" "Royal birth, and the hereditary right to his great position." "Then if a man is in a condition of supremacy over the rest of creation, a king is more than a man if he is allowed to rule men?" "Sir, pardon me! A king is not more than a man, but men choose him as their ruler because he is worthy."

"Precisely." "He might be an idiot or a cripple, a fool or a coward—he would still be king?" "Most indubitably!" "Strange sovereignty!" said the young prince, and still strange patience in the people who would tolerate it.

Such reasoning leads the young prince to the resolve that he will be a man as well as a king. He resolves to break through all the "miserable conventionalism, the sordid commonplace of a king's surroundings," and stand for something more than a dummy. He is married for state reasons to a princess of a neighboring realm. The situation of a loveless union is accepted by them, but the memory of a youthful love-affair that ended in tragedy because of his rank and the impossibility of marriage with a "daughter of the people" makes him finally rebel to some purpose against such conditions.

Under the name of Paquin Leroi, a journalist, he joins a band of Socialists. He plays the double role of king and of revolutionist, and in these two roles succeeds in learning and correcting the intrigues of his ministers, in reforming the press, and in bringing down what the author considers the hostile power of the Church of Rome. At the end of the story, he becomes the king of the people—the ideal exponent of "temporal power."

But in attaining this ideal he proceeds that after all, there is something greater. In the meetings of the Socialists he meets a woman who is recognized as one of their leaders. His love for this woman comes to be the great influence in his life. He discovers that he has served the people not through an ideal, but through love. He puts aside the position he has won, to win her love in return. The climax of the story the author weaves around this motive: The woman is assassinated by a jealous lover. According to her wishes, she is set adrift after death in a ship, after the old Viking custom, "to sail the seas alone." On the deck of the helpless craft that is being driven by storm out to sea the two rival lovers meet. One of them kills himself, and the other—the king—kills himself to the coffin and goes down with the ship.

Such, in brief, is the story. But in Miss Corelli's work it is not the story that counts. Her success is sensationalism. Here, for example, is what she has to say of the press: "Originally the press in all countries was intended to be the most magnificent institution of the civilized world—the voice of truth, of liberty, of justice—could be neither bribed nor biased to cry out false news. Originality was meant to be its mission, but nowadays what, in all honesty and frankness, is the press? What was it, for example, to this king, who from personal knowledge was able to practically estimate and enumerate the forces which controlled it, the proprietors and editors of different newspapers sold in cheap millions to the people? Most of these newspapers were formed into companies; and the managers issued "shares" in the manner of tea-merchants and grocers. False news, if of a duly sensational character, would sometimes send up shares in the market; true information would equally on occasion send them down."

And, concerning the people who wrote for these newspapers—of what calling and education were they? Male and female, young and old, they were generally of a semi-educated class, lacking all distinctive ability—men and women who were on the average desperately poor and desperately dissatisfied. To earn daily bread they naturally had to please the editors, and in authority over them, hence their expressed views and opinions on any subject could only be counted as nil, being written not independently, but under the absolute control of their employers."

So much for the press—the "weathercock of speculation," as it is called a few pages further on. In her ideas on the Church of Rome the author makes thoroughly good the promise in her earlier novels. The question is not whether one agrees with or condemns these attacks on the Church of Rome, on the press, on the Jews, on all the various topics that Miss Corelli discusses in the course of a novel. The point is that the melodramatic way in which she expresses her exaggerated ideas is her most picturesque attribute as a novelist. As in this novel, most of the discussions could be omitted. But if they were, there could only be left a melodramatic story with only one unusual way of committing suicide not mentioned in the author's former work.

She Escaped the Knife

Ten Months of Peace After Dreadful Suffering

Operations are becoming a fad; every young man, as soon as he is graduated from a medical college, considers himself capable of undertaking the most serious and complicated surgical work; and hundreds of lives are sacrificed annually to this mad frenzy of incompetent men, to rush into work which should only be undertaken as a last resort, and then only by the most experienced and careful surgeons.

It is a pleasure in view of these facts to read the following letter from a woman who has been saved from one of those dangerous operations. "I know I should have informed you long ago regarding my case of piles and the good done me, and I believe I am cured. Last December I sent for your book. I have never been bothered since then, and before I had suffered for the last eleven years, and as the time I wrote I had given birth to a child, and they came down with the delivery of the child, by the hand of I could not get them back and I suffered everything, and the doctor said nothing but an operation would ever relieve me; but I read of your remedy in our daily newspaper and I told my husband to get me a box and I would give it a trial before consenting to the knife, and thanks be to your wonderful medicine, I was saved from the operating table."

Every person suffering from piles that my husband and myself hear of, we recommend your wonderful medicine. I just used one $1.00 box of Pyramid Pile Cure, and two boxes of Pyramid Ointment and two boxes Pyramid Pills, and I was, I hope, completely cured. If they ever show the slightest return I will certainly get some more medicine, but I hardly think I will need any more for it will be a year the 8th day of December since I had them and that makes it ten months and past now. Thanking you again and wishing you abundant success, I remain, Mrs. S. Hodson, 105 W. 11th St., Des Moines, Iowa."

Pyramid Pile Cure is sold by druggists for fifty cents a package or will be mailed to any address upon receipt of price, by Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich. Write this firm for little book describing the cause and cure of Piles.
