MICE HAVE FAMILY TREES

CHICAGO, Sept. 5.—Dr. Maud SLYE, University of Chicago scientist, has devoted 20 years of her life to cataloguing the family trees of 50,000 mice. It is her contribution to the medical world's fight on cancer. Dr. Snye has applied Gregory Mendel's law of heredity in her study of cancer in mice, which science has found closely resembles the disease in the human race.

Her experiments led her to declare that there apparently are two factors necessary to produce cancer, an inherited susceptibility to the disease, and irritation of the necessary intensity applied to the cancer-susceptible tissues.

During most of the day's 24 hours, this small, vital, gray curly haired woman can be found in a former residence that has been converted into a cancer laboratory from funds derived from the O.S.A. Sprague memorial institute. Here amid labeled cages of squealing pattering mice, she carries on her experiments. Because of her great value to research Dr. Snye has been relieved from active class duty in the university. She lives next door to the "mouse city."

Dr. Snye first presented the results of her experiments in heredity to the most detailed ever made to the American Society for Cancer Research in 1911. It was a startling document. Since then she has won many scientific honors.

COQUETTISH VEILS FOR FALL WEAR

Paris say that hats for early autumn seen already upon the heads of smart Parisians are smaller than ever and cut higher over the left eye. So sharp is this angle over the forehead that hats appear to be perched back on the hair.

And this is where the veil stages a come-back. Curls of hair arranged around the hairline can be kept in place only by some such strategy as the nose veil.

A tiny white velvet chapeau fashioned like a gob's hat seen here was trimmed only with a diamond bow-knot placed at the high side of the turned back brim, and a short veil reaching to the tip of the nose, flared

THE SON FOR WHOM SHE HAD SACRIFICED ALL

The white velvet caps made of twisted braids of the fabrics are so diminutive as to cover only the crown of the head, and of necessity require the addition of a short veil. How popular the veil may become in American fashions is a matter of conjecture. Such small hats worn in this extreme manner demand a rather beautiful and youthful face if the effect is to be pleasing.

In the tiny velvet models now seen not much is left at the nape of the neck, just a twist of the fabric or a bow of ribbon without any evidence of brim.

Smaller than ever are the knitted chenille caps, some round, some square and all entirely brimless. Metal strips sometimes are interlaced through the chenille.

Just now plain and crushed velvet hats are in the foreground, also satins, knitted wool and chenille. Felt hats are reserved for sports and travel models.

The small caps made of braided velvet are unusually smart. Trimming the top of the crown is the last word in millinery, provided the decoration be most discreet. With hats perched back over foreheads, the crown top likewise is moved to the rear, a gift any trimming there tends to go off at the back angle. This is the new and engaging aspect of many autumn models.

Bandeaux, and under brim treatments are a natural outcome of off-forehead and raised brim shapes. The more simple the bandeau, the better, restricted to a ribbon band or at most a band and bow.

A flower is possible either over or under the brim. Agnes is using flowers with the utmost discretion. It is a sweet trimming, after this long time since flowers appeared on any but early spring hats.

In addition to flowers and the metal strips on chenille caps referred to, small quilts are seen. And a great deal of ribbon, especially rather wide velvet ribbon, two or three inches in width, crushed and tied in small neat bows.

The note of contrasting ribbon is most important, such as turquoise on navy, green on black, and royal on black.

Felts, when made with brims, hug the neck in back and escape the forehead by a wide margin, often folding back over the crown in the front.

Waugh became the bride of Hedley L. Muttart, a prominent farmer and dealer of Carleton. The bride looked charming in wedding gown of white crepe satin with brida veil trimmed with orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of yellow roses and maiden hair fern. She entered the drawing room on the arm of her brother Mr. Samuel Waugh, of New Annan to the strains of Lohengrin's bridal chorus beautifully rendered by her sister Miss Jennie Waugh. Her little niece Hazel Simmons, dressed in yellow satin, carried a basket of sweet peas and ferns. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Brinton, pastor of Tryon Baptist Church, under a handsome arch limbed in yellow and white. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful wrist watch. Music was furnished during the evening by Mrs. James Stavert, Misses Bessie and Roy Smallman. A sumptuous wedding supper was served to about fifty guests, the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The dining room was hung with pink and white. The bridal table was decorated with sweet peas and centered with a massive wedding cake, while the guests' table was artistically arranged with bouquets of sweet peas and contained a handsome white
