Seven Sailed For Pleasure

By Graham Yorks CHAPTER XXV

"The Island's Gone!"

Captain Ventris was on the bridge when Stephen climbed up. The Captain's face was more than usually grim.

"You see what's happened?" cried Stephen.

Ventris, who was handling the wheel himself while the helmsman stood by with scared face, nodded.

"The island's gone," he commented unemotionally. "That explains it, Hyton. There's been a big subterranean disturbance somewhere around these parts."

"Have you ever known anything of the kind before?"

"Only once," Ventris admitted, "and that was only what I'd heard. Some parts of the ocean bed are softer than others, and the permeation of water, slow though it may be eventually gets down to the molten core. Then things happen. There's an upheaval and, as likely as not, we get a small land mass that wasn't visible before. Since we're well off the main routes this island may have been in existence fifty years or so. Now it's gone—back to the sea that gave it birth. It's a queer happening and may I be preserved from any more."

The storm was still raging, but the wind had lessened, making the navigation of The Lapwing a little easier.

"The compass has been playing tricks too," said Ventris. "The needles been going like a roulette wheel. When that happens it always indicates a severe degree of magnetic disturbance, and may be accounted for, by the subterranean earthquake, if you can call it that, and be satisfactorily accurate."

"Does Sir Timothy know that we've lost the island?" asked Stephen.

"I don't know," Ventris answered. "My jobs up here until we know precisely where we are."

Stephen went below again, and found Moyra Winstanley considerably less frightened than she had been when he had left her.

"What happened?" she asked. "Sir Timothy's rambling around looking for someone who can tell him. I didn't know anything except what you told me."

"The most extraordinary thing has happened," Stephen told her. "The island has vanished—swallowed up by the ocean, Ventris says."

"Vanished! Swallowed up! But that's impossible!"

"We can't ignore our eyes, Ventris thinks that's how it came to be uncharted. No one knew about it. Due to volcanic disturbances on the sea bed."

Moyra Winstanley's eyes were wide with amazement.

"It's like a page from a fairy story isn't it?"

"Yes," Stephen had grown thoughtful. He was remembering the story he had told Sir Timothy's guests the night they had run on the island of the same name. The legend that was supposed to be thrown up out of the sea—the island that was known to the faithful as the Paradise of Dreams."

"What are you thinking?" Moyra inquired.

He told her his thought.

"It's certainly strange," she admitted. "And some strange things have happened too. To me it seems unreal—as though it never happened—although there never had been an island and that we've been dreaming."

Stephen laughed nervously. "Here," he protested, placing both hands on his shoulders. "Just you stop all that. You're making me feel quite creepy. But you're right," he acknowledged, "it does seem strange—like a fairy story. And people did behave extraordinarily in the island when you came to think of it."

"Let's not think of it now," she smiled at him. "You must have lots of work to do. Holiday-making over, remember?"

"You don't think that's easy to forget about it as all that, and breakfast in the saloon was an eerie meal which all of them took despite the storm."

"Ventris was there heartier than usual, but Sir Timothy looked considerably worried."

"You're quite sure the island's disappeared?" the owner of The Lapwing sounded doubtful. "You don't think that having been re-floated in the storm we drifted too far away from it, so that we lost sight of it?"

"Captain Ventris shook his head. "We couldn't have drifted that far," he assured him. "The island went down like a ship that's holed. There's no doubt about that. It's been an eerie experience and I can't say I'm sorry it's over."

Men, Women! Old at 40, 50, 60! Get Pep

Feel Years Younger, Full of Vim

Doings At The K. of G. Boy's Camp

One down—two days to go. The first group of campers left Saturday. But it is written that there should be no rest for the weary—so the second group of campers arrived yesterday. It is only fitting that we should here tell us a bouquet to the group that left us yesterday. One would travel far to find a group of forty-eight boys either more likable or better behaved. There was not one real honest to goodness squabble during camp, and only one notable instance of misbehaviour. To the boys who misbehaved, we extend our sincere thanks for all-round cooperation during the ten day camping period.

Now for a resume of the week's activities. Last Wednesday was another day of athletic activities. A good deal of time was spent at the beach in preparation for the Red Cross swimming tests. Wednesday night we all gathered in the recreation room for a sing-along. John MacDonald and Dickie Deighan favored us with solos. The sing song was followed by a treat of chocolate bars—provided by the camp supervisor, Mr. O'Keefe.

Thursday was the big day. The boys were all excited over the approaching visit of Mrs. Cudmore of Charlottetown, who was scheduled to hold the Red Cross swimming tests. We feel that we need give us more than the statistics in connection with this. Of twenty-two boys who tried the test, twenty-one were successful. Following is the list of successful candidates:

Senior: Ken MacDonald. Intermediate: Stewart Grady. Junior: Verno Arsenault, Henry Gallant, Edward Dalton, Gerard Dalton, John Gallant, Arthur Gallant, Robert Gallant, Arthur Gaudet, Eric Gaudet, Wilfred Gillette, Leo Griffin, Roland Landry, Dickie Noonan, James Noonan, Jackie Noonan, Kenneth Perry, Richard Wedge, George McGuigan, Ernest Arsenault.

When one considers that these boys took a fourteen day course in seven days their feat is deserving of double congratulations. The same double set of congratulations is due to both instructors, Philip Murphy and Walter Sonler, and to Father Butler, who took so much interest in the youthful amphibians.

Thursday night the boys all sat in on a recreation in the recreation room of the main hut. Friday was a regular camp day. Friday night we had a camp ground. About the camp ground were movies in the recreation room. The films being provided by Mr. Henry Wedge, Mr. Earl Hickey and Rev. H. Wright arrived from Summerside with a treat of ice cream, the gift of an anonymous donor.

Friday night the boys had a field day at the beach to finish up the organized camping activities. Winners in the different events are as follows:

Running: Broad Jump—(10 years and under)—1. George F. Arsenault; 2. D. Whelan; 3. G. Perry. (11 and 12 years)—1. E. Dalton; 2. Robert Gallant; 3. Richard Wedge. (13 years and over)—1. S. Grady; 2. G. Dalton; 3. Sidney MacDonald. Standing Broad Jump—(10 years and under)—1. D. Whelan; 2. S. Arsenault; 3. G. Perry. (11 and 12 years)—1. Richard Wedge; 2. R. Gallant; 3. Leo Griffin. (13 years and over)—1. S. Grady; 2. G. Dalton; 3. R. Gallant. 100 yard dash—(10 years and under)—1. G. Arsenault; 2. G. Perry; 3. Louis Trainor. (11 and 12 years)—1. Ed. Dalton; 2. Tommy Grant; 3. Richard Wedge. (13 years and over)—1. Stewart Grady; 2. Gerard Dalton; 3. R. Gallant.

Other events were run off but to name the winners in each class of the different events would take too much time and space. (We want to stay in the good graces of the editor).

Saturday was close up day as far as the first group were concerned. There were few long faces as the farewell was passed around, but all of the boys expressed a desire to come back next year or sooner, if possible. We heard a few say the only reason they wanted to go home was that they missed their dogs, or rabbits, or something or other. We think it went deeper than that the last day or so.

The camp had two notable visitors during the week, Rev. J. McGonigh, S.J., of Seattle, Washington, and Rev. E. Murphy, S.J., of Boston, Mass. Both visitors expressed delight with the camp, and its surroundings.

We neglected to mention a donation of a case of apples—courtesy of George E. Clow of Summerside. Our thanks, and those of our departed wards, to Mr. Clow.

That seems to be it for this week. The new boys have almost all arrived. About fifty to date—more to come. We'll have a report on them ready for next Friday or Saturday. Tell them—stay out of the sun, you people.
