"THE JUDGMENT IS—DEATH"

There was an ominous silence about the march through the woods and back to the god of the mountain. Bill's hands were still bound and he was guarded closely by four young natives. When they arrived at the camp Aruman gave some directions and Bill was bound with his back to a tree. His hands were left free and Ahlways with averted eyes and trembling hands offered the captive water and food.

Bill accepted them. He knew that the supreme crisis of his life was near at hand and that he would need every ounce of strength and cunning he possessed to face this ordeal. But though he realized this, his mind seemed to be in a state of paralysis. He could not think. He could only relax against his bonds when he had eaten and drunk and give himself up to the dull pain in his head, the dull despair of his heart.

He was roused from this daze by a stir among Aruman's followers. Then to his intense surprise he saw them bind Ahlways to a tree facing Bill's. Bill could not fathom what this meant, but the abject fear on the face of his newly made brother acted as a spur to his lagging faculties. What could it mean? He knew of course that some heavy punishment would be meted out for the breaking of the tabu, but why Ahlways who had not even known of his absence, should be made a prisoner was a mystery.

After a long consultation between Aruman and the older tribesmen a drum was set half way between the two prisoners. Two youths stepped forward and began to sound a monotonous call upon it. The vibration was maddening and it continued for a long time, steady and rhythmical full of primitive meaning.

After an hour of this Aruman seated himself on his bamboo throne, which had been carried from the settlement to the clearing in front of the god of the mountain. He wore his ceremonial beads, his feathered cloak, and held in his hand a long spear with a carved wooden handle. His subjects gathered about him, leaning against their spears, wearing their many strings of beads, some of them with bunches of bright feathers bound to their foreheads.

Then, one by one, on the opposite side of the clearing from the men, the women of the tribe filed in, carrying their children, wearing their best beads and ornaments. Last to come, guarded on either side by Aruman's wife and Ummata, Katherine stepped into the circle. Bill jerked forward against his bond to see her better. Her face was pale and there were signs of tears, but she held her head proudly and stepped quietly without apparent fear, between her captors. She did not try to speak to Bill but she threw one long steady glance of courage at him. Then she took her place a little in front of the other women and waited for what was to come.

Aruman rose slowly to his feet and raised his hand for silence. Then he made a low obeisance to the god of the mountain, rose upright again, and stretched pleading arms wide to the sky. No cloud appeared, the day was fresh and bright, with the sun blazing down upon the clearing and the merest wind whispering in the trees.

"You are come, my people," he said, when this ritual had been observed, "you are come to sit in judgment on this white man blood brother of our tribe, sealed only last night to Ahlways by the rites of our tribal faith. Before the fire that saw their sealing had grown cold, this white brother had gone to break the tabu which for many generations has brought peace and plenty to our tribe. While we slept he talked with the white woman face to face. They have broken the tabu. But as she is not yet a member of the tribe, his is the more grievous sin. Let the wise ones among you speak and tell us what is to be done."

He ceased and sank again to his chair. Katherine, who had listened to his words knowing little of their meaning, took hope from the sorrowfulness of his tone. It was the tone and mien of a man grieved rather than angry. Now she listened to the next speaker.

"I am an old man. I have lived many moons on this island. Each year we have kept the faith of our forefathers and the rains have come and blessed the earth with fertility.

JANET GAYNOR, winsome Fox star, in the bathroom—one of the most charming seen in Hollywood—which sets off so well her flower-like beauty.

"THERE'S a caressing quality to Lux Toilet Soap that I have never found before except in finest French soaps—my skin feels so soft and smooth."

ESTHER RALSTON, popular Paramount star, says: "In their close-ups stars are more closely observed than women in any other profession. Their popularity largely depends on the beauty of their skin. Lux Toilet Soap is excellent for keeping skin delightfully smooth."

The cruellest test a skin can meet is the close-up. In the glare of the incandescent "sun-spot" lights, a star's skin must show exquisitely smooth. That is why nine out of ten screen stars use Lux Toilet Soap.

MARY ASTOR, lovely Fox star, says: "A smooth skin is one of the most important assets a screen star has. Like every woman, I have to guard my skin. I always use Lux Toilet Soap—a lovely soap."

Nine out of ten screen stars use this soap for smooth skin

LOVELY SKIN, fresh and smooth—it is the very essence of that flower-like beauty the world finds so appealing! Every girl knows how greatly her power to charm depends on the clear smoothness of her skin.

In Hollywood, stars and directors alike know this so well! "People respond instantly to the loveliness of beautiful skin," says F. W. Murnau, Fox director—and sums up the experience of 39 leading directors.

"Every screen star knows this," he goes on to say, forcefully, "They take the utmost care of their skin. For in the close-up only the skin of naturally flawless beauty can stand the pitiless search of glaring lights."

Janet Gaynor knows so well how important a part lovely skin plays in her success on the screen—she is one of the host of adored screen stars who keep their skin exquisite with Lux Toilet Soap.

Of the 451 important actresses in Hollywood, including all stars, 442 use this daintily fragrant white soap. They like its gentle care of their skin—its generous lather, too. All the great film studios have made it the official soap in their dressing rooms.
